The blast furnace at Boyne City is rapidly approaching completion. The vertical boilers are in position and the rest of the work is under such headway that the early fall will see the furnace in blast. A gang of men are finishing the ore dock. Cargoes of iron ore will begin to come in. A large supply must be secured before navigation closes. The chemical plant, which furnishes charcoal to the furnace, is being rushed with a battery of retorts. The four old ones of the Chapman type are removed. There will remain the opposite of the chemical plant to 1,000 bushels of charcoal per day.

A strange story comes from Mackinaw City, which is substantiated by statements of citizens of that village. The story concerns John Anderson, an old resident of Mackinaw City. Years ago when Mr. Anderson was a resident of the southern part of the state, he entered into an agreement with a young fellow, a friend, to run back in the grocery business, and advanced $500 to this partner, who was to keep the stock. The stock was never purchased, for the supposed friend kept the money for himself. For the week, nothing more being heard from him. Mr. Anderson, now and one man, moved to Mackinaw City, where he has since resided. Now comes the strange part of the tale. A short time ago a wealthy other owner and small millionaire came to Chicago for surgical aid, suffering from a throat affection. He grew rapidly worse, and on his death bed repented of his past sins, told his life, etc., and directed that $25,000 of his large estate be given to John Anderson, of Mackinaw City, from whom he had obtained $5,000 in his youth, and with which, he said, good work, eventually making a fortune. Mr. Anderson was notified of this strange bequest and left for Detroit, where he obtained the money, which follows is a good point in his old age.

—William Owen's leading support is W. J. McConnell, an actor who has supported some of the greatest of American tragedians before he associated himself with Mr. Owen. Don't fail to see these eminent artists at Lewis opera house Saturday night.

—The concert of the two waltzes rendered on Friday evening at the Inn Cantina.—W. L. Coleman, manager and producer. Mr. Coleman is a professional in minstrel and comedy dramatic work and the Friday evening show was fully up to the standard, reflecting much credit upon Mr. Coleman's talent and management.

—Geo. H. Van Fett deserves a pension for the efforts to get the farmers together once a year in friendly intercourse. It means a great deal. Aside from this, he gets some good rug nuts from abroad. Every citizen of Charlevoix county wants to see Fred M. Warner, the next governor. He will be there.

—Advices from Chicago state that the surgeons have amputated H. J. McNeilie foot, and that hopes for his recovery are now entertained. Previous to the amputation he remained unconscious most of the time, and the operation was resorted to as a last hope. Mrs McNeil writes that he has fully recovered consciousness, and seems to be gaining.

—Only at long intervals in Charlevoix favored with a dramatic presentation approaching the class given by the William Owen company. We have had Uncle Tom's Cabin and others of the hard-worked sort, but high class, intellectual, truly histrionic talent does not come to us often. William Owen takes rank among the most scholarly tragic and romantic stars in the dramatic firmament. That he comes to Charlevoix is indeed fortunate for us. Don't fail to see him and his company at Lewis' Saturday night.

—Wm. Owen and his company at Lewis opera house Saturday evening Aug. 20, in "The Lady of Lyons."

—The greatest dramatic event in Charlevoix the past five years.—Wm. Owen and company Saturday night in "The Lady of Lyons."

—Call on Owen to see and talk with the next governor of Michigan, Fred. M. Warner, attend the Farmers' Friendly picnic at Norwood next Thursday. It will be a great event.

—Charlevoix is the winner again, in the K. O. T. M. M. contest at Traverse City Friday, the Charlevoix drill team took the honory, and Mr. L. O. T. M. second in the ladies contest. The boys naturally feel elated on being the champions of Northern Michigan.

—The demand for F. F. A. souvenir buttons is such that it will be necessary to get a second supply, the first being almost all gone. The picnic grounds have been enlarged and improved so that there is no danger of the picnicers being crowded in any way at Norwood if the attendance is twice that of last year.

—The steamer Vanitie, of U. S. fleet of was detailed for the use of the Michigan Naval Reserve, went ashore at eleven o'clock Saturday night just south of light house point opposite Petoskey. It makes odd sailors laugh, inasmuch as the night was clear. The tugs Wheeler and Taylor of this port released the ship Sunday afternoon.

—A stone blocked the bridge Tuesday, and the schooner I. B. Castro in tow of the tug Wheeler collided with it, carrying away her jibboom, but doing very little damage to the bridge. The bridge tender claims he gave the warning to the tug in time to have checked the schooner but the facts will probably come out in a law suit.

—As Thos. Lilan, of this place, accompanied by his dog, was going through the woods from Camp Lake one day last week, the dog brought an animal to lay, which, after a short fight, was killed. It proved to be a badger. The beast was brought here. It weighed twenty pounds. Within the memory of the oldest inhabitant there have been but three badgers killed in this county.

—Before you pass judgment upon the operation of primary election "reform," as proposed, investigate. Satisfy yourself that the proposed measure is really a reform before you vote for a popular for governor of Michigan. Reason out the proposition before jumping from the frying pan into the fire. Convince yourself that a minority or minority selection of candidates for office is preferable to the majority system that obtains under the present caucus system. There is a back and count up the number of caucuses that have not been honored by your presence. The true remedy is—attend the caucus.

—The senatorial convention at Traverse City last week thus expressed itself regarding senator O. C. Moffatt: "In performing the duties which have brought us together here today as delegates from the 27th senatorial district, it gives us pleasure and may be fully endorse the record made by our present representative in the state senate, Hon Orlando C. Moffatt, but to give further expression here is but to a done existing among the republicans of our entire district that senator Moffatt shall again be our candidate. In matters pertaining to the district and to the affairs of state, Senator Moffatt has well performed his duties, and we believe there will be added value to our district, to the state and to the republican party in his renomination here today, and in his certain election by an increased majority which will follow at the coming election in November."

—Miss Edna Mason, who for more than a year has been a government trained nurse in the Philippines, has returned, having reached San Francisco Monday.

—We take off our hat to the new editor of the Harbor Springs Inquirer. He is a good fighter, anyway, and we like a good fighter. We never saw the gentleman, but we acknowledge receipt of a ten-inch armor piercing projectile.

—Mr. Van Fett the president of the F. F. A. has been making a canvass of the country all the way from Harbor Springs to Traverse City making arrangements for excursions and attractions of all sorts, and wherever he goes meets with a good reception, everywhere the people are expressing their intentions of attending the picnic at Norwood Thursday, Aug. 25th.

—Hon. H. A. Wheeler, of Chicago, well known here, has devised a cheaper method of asphalt paving which he has offered to Detroit through his local agent, Herman Yates. Instead of using broken stone in his concrete he uses only sand and cement, and binds it together by pieces of metal cut into strips and elevated, and operating on the same principle as an extension gale. This is imbedded in the concrete and binds it together. This obviates the use of any binder between the concrete and the asphalt. Improvement in the method of laying of holes in the surface of the concrete to prevent the asphalt from "creeping." Asphalt Paver Proctor regards the invention favorably.

—Charlevoix people are not often favored with dramatic entertainments of the William Owen class. Some years ago Mr. Owen appeared here in a summer engagement, in "Hamlet," "Romeo and Juliet," and other Shaksperan plays, and has twice appeared in Petoskey and Traverse City since. Now he has decided to give Charlevoix another try. Mr. Owen is one of the most scholarly interpreters of Shakspeare in the country. His "Hamlet" has been pronounced equal to that of Southern or Winnestites, and many think it is a greater "Lady of Lyons," ranks with the legitimate" in power and beauty and Mr. Owen, in "Claude Melnotte," and, after added study and experience, critiques his performance here. The engagement of Mr. Owen here is of great importance to Charlevoix, as it gives us the opportunity of a first-class company, such as the Owen company, to appear in our opera house

By EMILE GABORIAU

The thought thrilled that at last he had hit the marks. Mme. Fauvel was the weak point of Lagrande. Once she could be induced to confess, the game had to end—she could hardly, forced to make her choice, but side against Lagrande.

Timidly, Julien ventured, "Madame, I know the time is the really, wanted proof comes because delay. The longer we wait, the harder it will be to secure the evidence." He was thinking of the proposed opening of the trunks in the Boulevard de Montmorency, which was fixed for a week from now. He continued, "I am sure, Madame, that you have not the slightest idea of the serious nature of your husband's conduct. Perhaps, if you knew, you would be willing to help us."

Mme. Fauvel was seated, about to speak, when the door opened and Lagrande entered followed by Mme. Lerouge and Mme. Lerouge's daughter, Mme. Fauvel, both of whom rushed to her side.

"What do you mean, gentlemen?" he asked.

In response to one, they both answered.

He turned to one—they both answered.

He turned to one—it was Mme. Lerouge who spoke—and Mme. Fauvel, who was a little, as she is, in the shadow, saw the look of terrible anxiety on her husband's face. Lagrande was a tall, well-built man, with a face that was at once strong and kindly. Now, he looked like a man who had received a death sentence.

"Nothing, Madame, nothing," he said. "Only, I am very, very sorry to have—"

"Yes," she interrupted, "I know how sorry you are. But what do you mean? What do you want?"

"Only, Madame, that you should be a witness to the opening of the trunks."

"Is that all?" she exclaimed, with a sigh of relief. "Why, I thought—I don't know what I thought. But I was afraid you had come to say something terrible."

"Perhaps it is my pretty duty, you sigh so at the thought of it," he said.

He Chevalier had interrupted to say, to Julien:

"It is impossible for me to seek an explanation from a man who doubts his identity under the guise of a friend."

"You are if liberty may hold dear, to act the master of the house who I am—if you do not—"

The clerk stood by with a sardonic smile and offer of assistance, which all Chamaret steadily in the face, and in unmovable silence.

"I was the last friend, monsieur, that you dared insult over land. I was his advocate, and the confidant of his last wishes."

These few words fell like a clap of thunder upon the Chamaret. He turned deeply pale, and staggered back with one hands stretched out before him, as if shrinking from a phantom. He tried to answer, to protest against the charge, but the words froze on his lips. His face was pitiable.

"Come, let us go," said Lagrande, who was perfect.

And he dragged Chamaret away, half supporting him, for the wretched man's drooping knees, and clung to every object to prevent to prevent falling.

"Hello!" exclaimed the clerk.

He thought was chance at which Julien looked as the commissaire, and responded curtly, he, after a moment's hesitation, he to follow the others.

"Wait! wait!" cried the clerk.

"What is the matter?" Lagrande asked.

"Why, this money!" he stammered. "Who was to be arrighted? What terrible mystery have I unknown in his house said?"

The room alone with his banker, and startled in pursuit of Mme. Fauvel. He stood for a long on a sofa in the large salon, engaged in so mingled confusion with Madame.

"Yet seems they are taking over the house, for I have among cause to be here," he stammered. "I might as well go, too."

He completely crushed his drab with a decision, and started for home. Under the cold, frosty air would cool his confused brain.

CHAPTER XVIII.

The clerk walked up the Rue St. Lazare and stopped before the Fauvel-Mandet house. A man suddenly started out of a place of concealment, and plunged upon him with a dagger.

Fortunately the clerk had a coat like leather, which enabled him to protect himself against immediate injury. He was as rather limited, the man crouching in the back door of a house, and had the presence of mind to assess an attitude of defense which stood him in good stead, he repelling his blows back before him.

This movement certainly saved his life, for he could not hold out long against two men who would have instantly killed him had it penetrated his breast. Longer more than two minutes he could not.

"Let me alone!"

And throwing off his coat and he put him on a defensive. Blow his blow he was not quite equal to the two men, and he was soon in the worst of it, and he was soon in the worst of it, and he was soon in the worst of it. He was soon in the worst of it. He was soon in the worst of it. He

KITE FLYING IN THE EAST.

In Oriental Countries the Sport is a National Pastime.

Home-made kites outside the America can buy and afford him lots of fun, but it is strange that he does not invest in artistic and material kites, such as they have in Japan, China and Korea, where all the users have a motive. A figure of an eagle or of Uncle Sam with its arms outstretched would be quite impressive.

In all Japan oriental countries kite flying is a national pastime and thousands of people on holidays gather up on the hills and watch the sport.

In China the sport ends on the ninth month in a festival called "kites on high." In Japan and Korea the boys only fly their kites for fifteen days out of the entire year.

But kite-flying in these countries is quite secondary to kite-fighting. The fighting machines are made on rectangular bamboo frames covered with paper and have a hole in the middle. They have no tails and the strings are not silk dipped in fish glue and powdered with pumicate. The moment two kite strings are crossed, no matter if one belongs to royalty itself, the plaster must let out his line. The strings that is drawn tight is sure to be cut through. The instant a kite is cut down it is seized by the small boys in the streets.

Death of Noted Sea Captain.

Capt. James Hall, who died recently at East Braintree, Mass., at the age of 91, was one of the oldest sea captains in New England. Capt. Hall was second mate, afterward first mate of the vessel on which Richard H. Dana sailed around the world, and he is pictured in "Two Years Before the Mast." Later Capt. Hall was in command of a merchantman in the China and East Indian trades. In 1851 he joined the Pacific mail fleet.

Better Than Gold.

"I was troubled for several years with chronic indigestion and nervous debility," writes S. J. Green, of Lancaster, N. H. "No remedy helped me until I began using Electric Bitters, which did me more good than all the medicine I ever used. They have also kept my wife in excellent health for years. She says Electric Bitters are just splendid for female troubles, that they are a grand tonic and invigorator for weak, run down women. No other medicine can take the place in our family." Try them. Only 50c Satisfaction guaranteed by F. N. Hines & Co.

Veneration for American Flag.

While on the Chicago train the other day Max Tweed, of York, Pa., found an old and tattered American flag, wrapped in a paper parcel with ash. Written on the paper was this inscription: "Take good care of this flag. It was made in 1776." Years ago the house in which the flag was found was the home of a soldier of the revolution.

It Depends.

"They call me mad, the youth, "that men who work live longest. Do you believe it?"

"Well," replied the sage, "it depends a good deal on whom they try to work."

Not Acting His Part.

Customer—Hi-yoo! How lord mouthed and domineering that man is. Is he a member of the firm?

Salesman—Yes; he's the silent partner.

Willing to be a Victim.

"Women claim that the way to get an husband is to give his points at nicely cooked food."

"Well," answered Mr. Bitter Bachelor, "I only don't care to stand for it."

YOUNG MAN RICH, BUT FRUGAL.

Young Rockefeller Always Carefully Counts the Cost.

That John D. Rockefeller, Jr., is close is well demonstrated by the following story, which is said to be absolutely true.

Young Rockefeller wanted a safe for his wife's jewelry, and he wrote to a well-known firm and asked them to notify him when they had a nice safe on hand. In a few days Mr. Rockefeller received word that the firm had a safe that they thought would suit him.

He made an appointment, and went to see the safe the next day. The safe was a beauty, and Mr. Rockefeller appeared to be well pleased with it.

"How much is it?" he inquired.

"Two hundred and fifty dollars."

Mr. Rockefeller thought a minute and then asked to see some other safes. He was shown through the building, and, after asking many questions as to prices, he broke for the cost $28.

"Now will we ship it, Mr. Rockefeller?" the clerk asked.

"That depends. What will it cost to send it to my home at Tarrytown?"

"Fifteen dollars."

Mr. Rockefeller again did some more thinking, and then said: "Well, you may ship it here a few days the weather will be down shortly and I will have it call for my order."

The River Boys Neat.

After being tied up for several weeks the Belgian fleet resumed operations yesterday. Mr. Chalon has gone out on a strike, but the shade of a Russian battleship came along and started to shoal the captain's business so he was forced to stop striking.

Annette is telling a good tale about a horse he knew before he died. It seems that the horse ate some its feed which was stored in the barn, and thereafter it would roll out of its stall in its sleep 127 to get its feed in the morning. Mr. Chalon has strange sound that resembled "papa," "mama."

Alexander the Great and Lou's wife had a narrow escape from going to the bottom of the river Monday afternoon. They were out rowing, and Alexander the Great, in a spirit of fun, began to rock the boat. Almost immediately it capsized and both people were thrown into the Sixe. Pompey and Noah, in a new sailboat, rescued them, but not before Lou's wife was kissed. Except Alexander he only takes this for her anyway.—Cleveland Leader.

Escaped an Awful Fate.

Mr. H. Haggins of Melbourne, Fla., writes, "My doctor told me I had consumption and nothing could be done for me. I was given up to die. One office of 5 cents that bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, thinking to try it. Results were startling. I am now on the road to recovery and owe all to Dr. King's New Discovery. It surely saved my life." This great cure is guaranteed for all throat and lung and lung diseases by F. N. Hines & Co. Druggists. Price 50c and $1.00. Trial bottles free.

TOWN SITE IS TO BE MOVED.

Florida Camp Residents of Forty Mile, Wash., Seek Higher Ground.

Plans are being formed for moving the town site of Forty Mile, Wash., to higher ground where the place will not be menaced by spring floods. The deluge which swept over Forty Mile early in May was worse than usual. The waters rose to a depth of 40 feet and had the whole place been in the direct path of the rushing ice floes and from the mass of logs which were carried down the river with the spring freshet. Damage to the stocks of goods and buildings amounted to $10,000.

The Northern Commercial company's store and other merchants had to pile their goods on high shelves and counters. Some of them were placed in cribs and carried to higher ground. Everybody fled to the hills and stayed there several nights. Water in the warehouses stood six feet deep.

The new town site, as laid out will be on such higher ground that should a new name will be selected because of the contrast with the present name with Forty Mile river.

South Africa's Even Climate.

Meteorological records show a far more equable temperature in the east districts of South Africa than on the upper plateau, the mean daily range for the year between maximum and minimum readings for the former being only 13.5, against 22.5 at Kimberley and at Pretoria. It is hardly doubtful that the east coast of Durban, the mean maximum for the hottest month only reached 84 degrees. On the other hand the mean minimum for the coolest month was 52.8 at Durban and 19.6 for Kimberley. Under these circumstances a visit to the south districts should be made at any season of the year.

High Prices for Old Sauk Bows.

When one notices the extraordinarily large sums which have been spent on the acquisition of such bows one is inclined to think that the habit of making bows has abandoned than one would be if it were to be revived. Two years ago the Sauk Indians, the remnants of another tribe, yields the enormous sum of £17,000 and had the £1,000 paid for a Lewis XIV oval gold box, inlaid with six plaques and painted with classical themes, is an example of the attraction which these objects do were have always exercised over purchasers of antiquities.—London Globe.

Crown Gems at Rare Worth.

The Russian crown jewels constitute the largest collection in the world. Individual pieces are each yes added to it. From time to time the monarchs the house of Romanoff under the dominion of Russia have brought gorgeous gifts to the crown and from the Peter the Great alone wonderful jewels, which have accumulated year by year.

American in Sultan's Navy.

Capt. Buchanan, commander of the American-built Turkish cruiser Medjidieh, has accepted completion in the duty of the sultan.

POWER OF THE IMAGINATION.

It Frequently Plays Strange and Unexpected Pranks.

"We humans are a pretty weak-minded lot," said the William Zevely, of the Indian Territory, who was philosophizing. "Witness how a man goes to a race track to play a certain horse and lets any stranger tout him off it.

"I remember when Ash Heller was sergeant-at-arms of the Missouri Legislature. Ash was a big, burly, healthy man, with a face like a full moon. One Monday morning Senator Walker put up a job on Ash. He bonded up half a dozen senators and told them to go to Ash one after another and ask him what was the matter with his face.

"They all agreed, and Walker started the ball rolling.

"Good morning, Ash," he said, when he met the sergeant-at-arms. "How are you this morning?"

"Punk rate, senator; foul rate."

"But, Ash, what in heaven's name is the matter with your face?"

"Nothing is the matter with my face," said Ash, rubbing his hand over it. Nothing at all."

"Six soon, one after another, met Ash and held the same conversation with him. Each time Ash protested there was nothing the matter with him, but his protests grew weaker and weaker.

"When the seventh came around and said: 'Good morning, Ash, how are you this morning?' Ash replied: 'Punk rate, except for that blankety blanked face of mine.'"

The Rosary of Verse.

Some people think that a rosary is a string of beads, but they are mistaken. The rosary is a string of days by the flow of their years, and they life by the moons of their lives.

The days it earth may shine
The Angels, and the night of years;
Or, may they come in tears
Or, may they come in fears
But God loves to hear unanswered by tears
Ah yes by the silver grey
Ah yes by the golden hair
And not by the sorrow that we pass on
And not by the furrows the years of
On the forehead and face have made.
Ah, no! we must not forget
That we all, one of the centuries
Are all one, and the fall of our years
Are the springtime—but winter is There.
And the old are children yonder
Ah, yes! and the young are old
And they sing in age as in youth very Well
And they teach, for their cross was
A
A thousand of years may blow
Ah the fellow of a day
Ah the fleece whiter than snow
Ah
It reaches the haven through years.
—Father Ryan.

Met His Match.

The clever Dr. Ritchie of Edinburgh met with his match while examining a student.

He said: "And you attended the class for mathematics?"

"Yes."

"How many sides has a circle?"

"Two," said the student.

"What are they?"

What a laugh in the class the student's answer produced when he said: "An inside and an outside."

But this was nothing compared with what followed. The doctor said to the student: "And you attend the moral philosophy class also?"

"Yes."

"Well, you would rear lectures on various subjects. Did you ever hear one on cause and effect?"

"Yes."

"Does an effect ever go before a cause?"

"Yes."

"Give me an instance."

"A man whooping a horse."

The doctor then sat down and proceed no more questions.

Newspapers Came High.

When Cy Warman, "the poet of the rails" was traveling through Bonanza Valley, over Dawson City, a short time after the discovery of gold in the Klondike, he passed a young man with a heavy pack of papers on his back. Some men were hurrying their claims near by, up on the shores of the Gold. "Now and then," said Cy Warman, "the young fellow stopped, put his load to the side of his mouth, and shouted up to the men N'Yorek 'n Seattle papers!" in orthodox newsboy style.

"I asked him how he sold them. "Fifty cents for Seattle and a dollar for New York" he replied. He had two hundred papers and expected to clean a hundred dollars on the trip, which would take him three days."

This Man a Model Witness.

E. C. Benedict, who recently in Gerard pin Cooper, every day, noticed three men with a table between them and one to find a fourth man for a whist party. A few seats behind them sat a man who seemed so much interested in their conversation that one of the card players asked him.

"Are you for whist?"

The man addressed made no sign that he had heard, but looked out of the window.

"Are you for whist?" repeated the card player, in a louder tone.

"Whist is it?" answered the man. "I'm a witness for the railroad in this case, and the lawyer told me not to say a word about it until I reached the court house.—New York Times.

GOVERNMENT TAGS ITS FISH.

Object is to Identify and Keep Track of the Finny Tribe.

The United States fish commission has contracted the small boys' habit of tagging fishes. Metal tags are fastened to marine fishes which are let loose in the ocean with the idea of identifying them in case they are caught at any future time.

The tag, which is light and made of copper, is securely fastened by a wire passed through a fin near its junction with the body. No two tags are alike, each having its own markings. Fifteen hundred cod were thus duly tagged and released last spring on the New England coast. The object of the tagging is to ascertain the rate at which a cod grows, the frequency of its spawning and the extent of its travel in the ocean.

The same experiment is being tried this year with young salmon, artificially hatched, for the rivers of the Pacific coast. The fishes are "fingerlings," about three inches long. It is expected that the age at which the salmon come from the sea to spawn will be ascertained, also the rate of growth, and the percentage of fry that attain maturity. The experiment is an interesting one, and has an obvious bearing on fish culture problems.

TRAPPER OF BIG HAWKS.

Pennsylvania Man Holds Record as Champion Catcher.

Glenn Rowell, a young man of Hunter, Pa., has certainly broken all late records as a hawk catcher. He began his work of catching hawks by means of traps in November last, when on the 23d day of that month he bagged his first bird, which had a spread of wings 50½ inches from tip to tip. The day following he caught another, which measured 53½ inches. On December 8 another one was added to his list, which measured 49 inches. February 27 of this year another was caught, which measured 51 inches. May 4 he secured one which showed a spread of wings of 50 inches, on the 14th another was sold, having 48 inches of wing, on the 19th another big fellow was trapped, which showed a spread of 48 inches of wing power. On the 24th perhaps the cap of all was taken, and this fellow could unfold 53 inches of wing power. On the same date another was decoyed into Mr Rumsey's trap, with a wing measurement of 51 inches.

Something Hard to Buy.

The late Mr. Gibson, former mayor of Long Island City, was a fond and indulgent father. Nothing was too good for his daughter Jessie that money could provide. The lawyer was not well versed in foreign language, however, and upon hearing an account read of a society belle of whom it was written she had a je ne sais quoi upon her wedding she wrote a most charming person, said to Miss Jessie:

"Do you and get one of those things. There's nothing any of those girls can do that I don't think that you can't buy."—New York Times.

Health Permits Retirement.

Editor William R. Chenoweth of Vidalia has withdrawn as a candidate for congress in the fourth district (Georgia) district because his health will not permit of his continuing the campaign. He made his announcement at a meeting in Dexter, where he and his opponent, R. D. Bentall, had a joint discussion.

Negro's Valuable Invention.

Anthony Grant, a negro who has worked in the machine shops of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad Company in Birmingham, Ala., for twenty years, has just sold a patent for a car coupler of his own invention for $100,000. In addition he is to get a royalty on every coupler made on his model for seventeen years.

Chance for Promoters.

The City of Naples offers a charter for a system of five different lines of railroads of which three must be underground. The central underground station, it is said, will be 214 feet below the surface.

Because She Smiled.

Douglas—I'm settled in some way every time I proposed to his town that days. Ella—Why, what happened yesterday? Douglas—Why, she kept giving them the dickey-bird, and I thought I'd try to find the way to make Edgar and pay for the dickey-bird. Ella—Well, I'm sure I'm glad to hear it.

The Republican Party and Primary Reform.

It is true as stated by the strenuous and unceasing primary reformers that the republican party of Michigan stands pledged to primary reform, and it does seem only a difference of opinion as to the best means to accomplish the end that has deferred legislative action.

The remedy put forth in the Colby bill in the last session was worse than the alleged evil and it was defeated, (at of this action comes all the controversy that has made itself an issue in this campaign.

The fundamental principle of our form of government is that a majority shall rule, and this principle must reach to the foundation of the franchise. Under the proposed measure this principle would be totally abrogated, and minority rule in the selection of candidates must take its place. This is not reform but abuse, and is capable of working greater mischief in the body politic than the caucus system which is now the target for these so-called "reformers."

The last republican state convention adopted the following plank in its platform:

We believe that the selection of candidates for public office should be protected from improper control and influence of corruption, and should be conducted as the judgment and will of the people in their respective counties and election districts may demand and direct. To that end we reaffirm the action of the republican convention at Grand Rapids May 15, 1902, in favor of primary reform where changes from the existing caucus and convention system are desired.

We further believe it wise and desirable that all caucuses and primaries relating to the selection of delegates to state conventions should be held upon the same day. And we recommend to the incoming legislature the adoption of such a law, with proper details for its satisfactory enforcement.

This sounds the key note of reform, where reform is necessary. It adjusts itself to varied political conditions, and corrects evils locally. The next legislature will pass a local option law, and if Charlevoix county desires to adopt the minority system of nominating candidates or convention delegates, it will have the chance.

The true remedy for the evils alleged, is for every voter to attend the caucus. No "machine" or "ring" can dominate when citizens faithfully perform their duty in attending the primaries. This is where the reform should come in.

When completed and furnished the entire cost will be from $21,000 to $22,000 and it will be one of the finest church structures in Michigan.

After nearly an all-night session on the 12th the republican convention of the Leelanau and Benzie representative district nominated A. F. Bunting of Leland to succeed H. D. Reynolds of Beulah in the state legislature Leelanau's delegation of seven stood by Bunting without change for 85 ballots and on the 85th the Benzie county delegation came over to Bunting in a body, making the nomination unanimous. The last ballot was cast at 2 o'clock in the morning.

Last Thursday or Friday a woman named Bain with a young son came to Torch Lake to the house of her son, Clyde Vogthe. She was from Rapid City and had left her husband, Joseph Cain who was section laborer on the Pere Marquette railroad. On Wednesday about noon Mr. Cain with a sam drove into Torch Lake with a Rapid City Hotel team and going directly to the house where his wife was stopping he endeavored to get her to return home with him and upon her refusal to do so he pulled out a razor and slashed his throat, nearly severing his head from the body. The act was done in the presence of his wife's son, and two small girls.

He notified Marshal Timmer who caught him on the spot.

—Charlevoix has very much to be proud of, in the resort season record. While at other Northern resorts the business has been unusually light, Charlevoix has been full. At this present writing, the Belvedere, Inn, Beach and Pines are full, and all the private boarding houses, including the Hallett and Francis, are turning away applicants. We are still of the opinion that another big resort hotel here would pay.

—On Thursday a telegram came from by the line addressed to Sheriff Pearson. The wording of the telegram was: "Meet a Texas outlaw at the station." Pearson was out of town, and the message was turned over to deputy sheriff Emrey, who at once, realizing that he had a big job on hand, telephoned all over the county to find his chief. About the time the deputy sheriff got his duties and gun out for the arrest, the message fell under the notice of Dr. Crouter, who recognized the signature—"Cameron." It was "Alex." J. Cameron of Fort Worth, Texas, who left Charlevoix sixteen years ago, after a pioneer residence here of many years. Although somewhat changed by reason of added years, "Alex" is the same "Double Scott" as of yore, and is having a good time among his many old friends. —Among the guests at the Beach Hotel are Mr. Sigmund Zelsler and wife, of Chicago. Mr. Zelsler is a prominent Chicago lawyer and Mrs. Zelsler is none other than the renowned Fannie Bloomfield Zelsler, the greatest pianiste in the world. Madam Zelsler has rooms at the small cottage, where she has her own Steinway piano. This great artist recently returned from Paris, where she created a decided furore among musical critics.

—Justus S. Stearns, who has been the special prophet of the "primary reform," Colby bill extremists, in the first man in Michigan who was four times a candidate for governor in four successive election years, and the first man who ever sought the nomination from two opposite parties in one campaign. Had he been nominated by either party it would have been probably said many times on the stump, that to man living or dead, ever spent so much money to corrupt, debauch and prostitute Michigan politics as he.

—All any republican should do in this matter of his vote for governor, in connection with the fancy of "primary reform" that constitutes the chief issue, is to sit down and carefully investigate the matter from the standpoint of reason. If he concludes that the fundamental principle of popular government is "majority rule," he will in the same breath condemn the primary election system that was proposed in the Colby bill, and which was defeated in the last legislative session. Any reasonable man will be governed by demonstrated fact, and no reasonable man wants minority rule in any phase of popular franchise.

—The Beach Hotel last Saturday night, was the scene of the most notable resort society event of the year. The large number of Beach guests was augmented by a number from the Inn, the occasion being the celebration of the tenth wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. Morris Strauss, of Chicago, and the seventh anniversary of the wedding of Dr. and Mrs Alex. of Chicago. It was a delicious party, and was a most interesting event, aside from the social features. There were Hungarians, and Gypsies, Indians and trampsmost piano, every-day ladies and gentlemen made up a respectable minority. Mr. and Mrs. Baker served dainty refreshments, and the dining room was gay with dancers until the midnight hour. Among the notable guests present: Dr. E. J. Kish, Sigmund Zelsler and wife (Madam Fannie Bloomfield Zeisler,) J. Forman, Julius Rosenthal, and Percy G. Ullman. The first prize for costume was awarded Madam Fannie Bloomfield Zeisler. Madam Zeisler was dressed as a Navajoe Indian woman, and carried a black and tan newfoot papoose on her back. The eminent pianiste entered fully into the enjoyment of the occasion. But if the many thousands throughout the world who have been entranced by her superb talent could have seen a photograph of her as Hon. Julius Rosenthal presented her with an empty pocket book, in the award of prizes—!

—Myer Cohen is quite ill at his home.

—Wm. See and wife, of Oregon, are here with relatives and friends, for a two week's visit. Mr. and Mrs. See will visit the world's fair on their way home.

—Julia Gray in "Her Only Sin" with the original Chicago cast will be presented at Loveday Opera House Friday Sept. 2nd. Excursions are being arranged for that night.

—As we go to press (Thursday morning) a fierce southwest gale is blowing, which will prevent boats landing at Norwood for the picnic. Rain also threatening.

—Jerome Heath has taken the contract to build a 17 room cottage for R. W. Hanson, on Dixon Avenue, opposite the Beach Hotel. Ground will be broken Monday morning.

—Rev. Bastian Smits minister of the First Congregational Church of Jackson Mich., will occupy the Congregational pulpit next Sunday morning. The church ought to be crowded on that occasion. Mr. Smits will be remembered as having preached here before to the great delight of all who heard him.

—Lincoln J. Carter's latest and greatest, successor, Julia Gray in "Her Only Sin" is booked at Loveday Opera House for Friday night Sept. 2nd, and only a few tickets in this part of the State are fortunate enough to secure this beautiful play. Arrangements are being made for excursion excursions to East Jordan for that evening.

—The elegant Belvedere orchestra has been furnishing music for the popular Wednesday evening dancing assemblies at K. T. Hall. This fine organization is under the leadership of Mrs. Anna Dugnan, and has five members, all proficient professional musicians. The orchestra will continue to play for the assemblies until sept 15th.

—Isbon, in his play of "Ghosts," has drawn a wonderful picture of another love in the character of Mrs. Alving. Lincoln J. Carter in his new play "Her Only Sin" has evolved a strong variant of this theme developed along lines leading to a happier and more satisfactory ending. Arrangements are now being made to bring this piece with Julia Gray and the original Criterion theatre production intact to East Jordan Sept. 2 at Loveday Opera House.

—Easter Day, Monday, Sept. 5th, will be a big day in Charlevoix. All labor organizations in neighboring towns will join the Charlevoix organizations in an appropriate manner. Exercises will be held in the park, at which Hon. Robert W. Paddock, and others, will speak. Several bands will be present from other towns, and a big crowd expected. Everybody will co-operate to make the day an enjoyable one for all.

—The Boyne City steamer Mary, temporarily in command of Capt. David Thompson, when off Oyster Bay Thursday, ran down a sail boat sailed by Mr. Whitford, of this place. There were in the boat Mr. St. Johns and wife and several other ladies, and four children. The boat was cut was cut down to the water's edge. A rent was towered from the Mary and all went aboard, but it is considered little less than a miracle. The matter will be thoroughly investigated by the government authorities.

—The funeral of the late Hon. Perry Hankins, of Traverse City last Friday, brought together many old settlers of the Grand Traverse region. Among them was Hon. H. O. Rose, of Petoskey, who, since the death of Mr. Hannah, is the only survivor of the original traders of the region. We recall many of these old timers, two generals—Campbell & Goodrich, at Northport; "Nick" Pickard, at Manitou Island; W. W. Barton, at Leelanau; Jerome A. Noble at Elk Rapids, Charles Wright, of St. James, Richard Cooper, at Little Traverse, and now wagon or Town Voyageurs hence. Mr. Rose in the one military figure among these early pioneers. He built, at Northport, in 1852, the first dock ever constructed on the Grand Traverse region. He is now 74, and is quietly resting on the fruits of his long years of honest, honored and loved by all who know him. May his remaining years be many.

Elk Rapids Progress. Hon. A. K. Dougherty is enjoying that week with the family of Wm. Chandler in this town. Mr. Dougherty before returning home will extend his visit to New York City and Brooklyn, Conn., where he will visit his numerous friends and old time acquaintances.

FAVORS PERE MARQUETTE

Railway Age on Name of New C., H. & S. System.

"If Cincinnati, Hamilton & Dayton is to be the title of the nearly 4,000 mile system made up by putting together the railroad of that name, the Pere Marquette and the Chicago, Cincinnati & Louisville," says the railway Age, "it will be a striking addition to the category of railway names which are geographically meaningless. Hamilton and Dayton are way stations on the lines to Chicago and Toledo, from Cincinnati, from which city they are respectively 24 and 30 miles distant. Important local centers as they are, their names have for years given no indication of the course and destination of the combined roads in various states which have been operating under that title, and the inappropriateness of the old name seems to be greatly increased by the inclusion of a congeries of lines running almost at right angles with the axis of the original system.

"One benefit of the great consolidations of recent years has been the tendency to replace the provincialism of early nomenclature with titles which gave some suggestion of the territory covered, or at least did not seem to limit the lines to the place between the two or three localities named. Rock Island is a larger title than Chicago & Rock Island, because it does not shut up the road to its two original termini, and Burlington route is much more expressive than Chicago, Burlington & Quincy, a name given when the imagination of the projectors had not conceived of a line extending farther from Chicago than the Mississippi river.

"Now that a great system is being organized on the foundation of the little local road started out from Cincinnati a half century ago into the rural vicinage, it would seem to be an excellent time to give the new combination a name big enough to cover both its present and possible outlines, preferably a name identified with the history and geography of the great region traversed. Cincinnati, Toledo, Chicago & Buffalo would give a tolerably clear idea of the scope of the system. But as this would be cumbersome what could be more appropriate for the proposed system than the familiar name of the priest's explorer, Père Marquette, whose name is already borne by more than one-half of the mileage of the three combining companies?"

The Inconsistency of It.

The chief source of the primary reform frenzy with which Michigan politics is threatened is Justus S. Stearns. Failing to secure the gubernatorial nomination on the republican ticket on the strength of an abnormal spasm, he bequeaths his cause to the democrats, and follows the same into the democratic camp.

And now what are the facts concerning this demagogue? No man has, in the past, done more to corrupt Michigan politics than Justus S. Stearns. In the canvass for the nomination in 1896 it is a notorious fact that the barrel of J. S. Stearns was wide open. More money was used by aspects in the vain effort to secure the nomination, that has been published by any aspirant for that office in the history of the State, unless it was it at Ferry in the same canvass.

If Justus S. Stearns could be made to show his cards from 1892 until 1902, it would show that he spent a fortune in an effort to buy the governorship, and subsequently turn democrats because of the republican "machine," and democrat journalists turn republican because Campau's democrat "machine," prevented the nomination of this same Stearns for governor on the democratic ticket.

As an exhibition of crazy politics, the 1904 record of Stearns and the democrat party in Michigan, taken in connection with the "primary reform" farce, will take the prize.

One "evidence of a live town" given in a communication to the Progress by an Elk Rapids citizen, is that of the merchants digging night worms on their street in order to get their places of business.

BEULAH LAND HOME.

A Benevolent Enterprise Worthy of Local Sympathy and Assistance.

Right here in Charlevoix county, under our noses, is an institution that some day will win a name among the great benevolent enterprises of the country.

At Hay Springs, near Boyne City, on the old "Chapman place," in the great building that has for 21 years been called "Chapman's folly," overlooking Pine Lake and the village with the beautiful hill-side sloping down from the north, and the broad lands and wooded knolls of the peninsula beyond, to the southward, is Beulah Farm Home—a haven of peace, and hope, and love, for homeless and friendless boys, presided over by an loveable and capable Christian gentleman as ever enlisted under the banner of the Master—Harmon Lee Swift.

It is a place where gentleness and love shed sweet where kindness and confidence dominate, and the phase of the little community life, where industry, order and thrift become a pleasure and not a task, where beaming faces and bright, smiling eyes greet you in the halls, and fields, the wood yard or the farm, and everything you see in your walk about the place appeals to your heart no less than it inspires your confidence and respect for the master spirit of the Home—Mr. Swift.

Among reformatory institutions this occupies a very unique position in its methods and facilities.

The State of Michigan has no public institution for homeless or neglected boys over thirteen years of age, unless they commit crimes. The same condition applies also to other boys who, though having homes, have dissolute or depraved parents and are unmanageable, or conditions that can lead only to vicious lives.

The Beulah Land Home will start to give such boys a chance. They have forty weeks of school and three months of work. They have regular work of one kind and another throughout the whole year, but, for three months, many of them get employment in other farms and in nearby factories. All that they earn this is banked to the credit of each individual who earns it. Those who do manual labor during the forty weeks of school are remunerated in this way. For every twenty minutes such a boy receives what is called a credit, or three credits per hour. Ten credits make a merit, and ten merits make a ticket. They rise on the farm more produce, such as corn, beans, potatoes, etc., than is required for their own use, and they sell the surplus three a year, at Thanksgiving time, the total amount received for such sales is divided by the number of shares that have been earned by the boys. That lives the value of each share, and each boy's bank account is then increased according to the number of shares he has earned.

No clothing is given to the boys, but they are made to know what is wear, even though the garment was given to the institution. What is paid for shoes, clothing, fuel, power, goes into a general fund called the "poor fund" from which nothing is even taken, except by vote of all the boys in their general assembly.

For the management of affairs, they elect from their own number the usual officers, such as President, Vice-President, Secretary and Treasurer, also Legislator, they have a poor commissioner whose duty it is to distribute the appropriations from the poor fund, as directed by the assembly. Other shorter officers are the Inspectors, who have police duties, one of which is to arrest and bring to punishment any who talk or in any other way disturb the quiet of the building after the time fixed for retiring. Another duty of the inspectors is to see that the boys give up promptly at the rising signal in the morning. The boys do not constitute a jury, make the rules and fix the penalties, and, if the inspectors fail to perform their duties diligently, they are voted out and new ones elected. One of the severest penalties for breaking a rule is that one cannot sit down to eat. The quantity and quality of his food is never restricted. No matter how bad he may be he can always have the same kind of food as the others get, but he is humiliated by having to stand for it while the others sit.

As we said at the outset, there seem to be possibilities in store for the Beulah Land Home. Its location is ideal. Its 100 acres of land will add all future requirements, and its buildings, with the improvements that will slowly but surely be accomplished, promise to single the place out as one of the future great benevolent institutions of the country.

Mr. Swift, with several of his boys, is to be at the Chicago Week Friday evening of this week by special invitation, at which time he will address a meeting of capitalists in the interest of homeless boys.

By EMILE GABORIAU

CHAPTER XIX.

In 1840 lived in his ancestral castle on the banks of the Blanne the old Marquis de Chaverny and his two sons, Gaston and Louis. They were the objects of his love in the same degree that his hate he visited his neighbor, the Count de la Vertaule. Stern, old and arrogant, she would have been the general determination as she was this baleful end, had it not been for her beautiful and gentle daughter, Valentine.

The estates were separated only by the river Blanne, which was swiftly rushing. It was no barrier for love. Valentine was fearless and from that moment his image filled her heart. But so many obstacles separated him! Yet they were happy, until one fatal evening, when she saw his face cross the lake at the greatest risk, and fair as her feet, almost unknown.

It is not she mutinied, trying to life for him, but her heart has known no peace, and had yet.

No, Valentine, however, hoped as he has not been proud, for I am friend to be true to my ancestors, and I am faithful, and in another one instead I have the love of my ancestors, which I have kept in my heart. Yet I know that this man loves me, and I know that I love him.

Yet, no matter how we are parted.

You are poor and she is destitute of the world's goodies, says, that she will find me in the world.

We shall have no need Gaston, he is a good man, and he will be happy with a good, young, calm, you will be free to love, and I will be free to love the love bonds of an unknown, which I have kept in my heart.

Gaston received the message and squirted her more dispiri in the phrase. Three months and several days passed. The Vertaule, finding the end baffled and the Marquis de Chaverny, the agent of Valentine, by leave of the officers of the Indian and the girl with his son Gaston, the wife of one of the most opulent of Parisian families, and the Count de la Blanne.

CHAPTER XX.

Time had united the remorse and anxiety of the Marquis de Chaverny, the plaints of a happy home was had found rest, and Mamie Napoleon. She had suffered so much at being compelled to deceive, that she could not be happy now even with fate.

The rainy November day her husband had gone to Provence on business. She was sitting near the fire, her feet, and thankfully meditating upon her present happiness, when the servant brought her a letter which had been left by a stranger who refused to give his name. Without the faintest presentiment of evil she opened the envelope and read the letter which signed petrified by the words which read her terrified eye.

Madame: Would it be telling too much upon the generosity of the person to whom I am indebted for the hope for half an hour of your time? To morrow, between two and three, will do myself the honor of calling upon you. "THE MARQUIS DE CHAVERNY."

Ah! she had hoped and believed that the fairy past was almost dead, buried in oblivion, and now it stood before her phantom and threatening.

The dreaded day came, and with it the man. Her courage was low, but she resolve his purpose, and though she prepared enough courage to meet the visitor in his power by accepting his fallen of Gaston (though he felt sadness) and leaving him in the care of his son, she could not altogether shake him off.

On the other hand, she dared not confess to her husband, who she could have confidence in her again, and she refused the sympathy of Mamie. The girl had divined that she was in distress, but prudent had to learn the cause.

The plotter gave time for the promised week. Five to consummate the plot he began. It was to ask her to call at his house. The poor woman, in the coils dared not stay away. How another not the assured her. The example was not in the cause. He also received her has the Brandon parlor, was announced with a bow and a smile, which a very her refused her sympathy.

This case was like Gaston's that she seemed more prone to be feeling to the character of the Marquis. Her sympathy it seemed only somewhat that Gaston was a man of the world, and that she saw him well calling gold.

In these years, Valentine. What for Gaston.

Gaston has been called Napoleon, were proposing to the seemed effeminate. She imagines that Maddelene took the name of Napoleon in her room.

The Hotel de Lorraine. She soon passed the Hotel de Lorraine. Gaston was found.

Only seven days ago asked questions questions as to where he never, and, and, and

"STAND PAT."

How Mark Hanna Made Good Use of the Famous Expression.

The origin of the expression "stand pat" is thus related by the Jacksonville Times-Union, the leading Democratic newspaper of Florida:

"When Hanna, the stout-hearted, was approached by a number of reformers, who all agreed that the tariff must be reformed, he waited till each had spoken, and then called for his stenographer. 'Now, gentlemen' said he, 'give us the items.' Thereupon there was closed door, for no two men on them could agree on the schedule. The Senator listened until the fidelity of his secretaries was fully apparent, and again spoke: 'We can't revise without cutting out somebody, and nobody consents to be cut. I tell you what I will do—let's stand pat.'

"Whether or not the incident is accurately described in detail does not matter much. The fact remains that the stout-hearted Hanna, the big-headed, the level-headed Hanna, did the Republican party and the country a great service when he applied to the question of tariff tinkering that now celebrated phrase brought face to face with the practical proposition, 'Give us the items;' the reformers weakened. They could not give the items. No man living can give them. The late Thomas B. Reed wittily remarked that tariff makers and tariff revisers are very easy things—'in the grind.' Not so, however, when it comes to framing and adopting tariff schedules on the floor of Congress. Then and there it is that you must 'give us the items.' Giving the items in a tariff bill is no mere child's play. The reformers could not give the items to Senator Hanna, they could only rise and fret and fume and fret. That was why the big man said to them, 'Let's stand pat.' It was good advice then. It is good advice now.

Roosevelt and Fairbanks.

The national convention's choice of Roosevelt and Fairbanks is but the formal record of the choice already made by the rank and file of the Republican party.

Theodore Roosevelt—the faithful aide of William McKinley—stands for national self-respect, power and prosperity. He is of himself the type of achieving American manhood. His nomination has been all but sure ever since the Republicans of Illinois declared his their choice for 1904. He is nominated not only for what he has done as president, but also for what he is as an American man.

Charles Warren Fairbanks was deservedly indicated for the Vice presidential nomination by his character and record and by the logic of the political situation. He has well deserved the honor, both as a vital Republican force in the national state and council, of the confidence that he inspires in men of business affairs throughout the nation. He strengthens the president where the president needs strength.

With such candidates the Republican party has nothing to explain or excuse in behalf of its chosen leader. The qualifications of both are well known throughout the nation. They do not have to be interpreted by others or be taken upon the assurances of any one. They speak for themselves. In no uncertain tone. With such leaders standing for sound Republican and national policy, and respect, the Republican party deserves—it merits—it has earned Mr. Chauncey Depew Cobb.

The Difference.

What is the difference between reciprocity and free trade? Reciprocity is free trade as far as it goes. If it went everywhere it would be free trade pure and simple, but none though has gone—West Shoreham (Vt.) Journal.

IS A CLOSED DOOR.

CANADA'S ATTITUDE UNFAVORABLE TO RECIPROCITY.

Stringent Measures Adopted by the Dominion Government for the Purpose of Restricting the Import of Manufactures from the United States.

Canada's unwillingness to serve as a dumping ground for the surplus manufactures of the United States has been repeatedly urged by the American Economist as fatal to the hopes and purposes of those who years for free trade between the Dominion and the Republic. Time and again we have endeavored to make clear the futility of such a project because of Canada's determination to build up her own industries and not to insure their destruction. We recently the Canadian attitude toward reciprocity in manufactured products has been illustrated by the Economist is now demonstrated by an official notification to the effect that Canada will refuse to submit longer to the "dumping" process. In the New York Journal of Commerce of June 16 is printed a dispatch from Ottawa in which it is stated that the amendment offered by Mr. Fielding, the Minister of Finance, in his budget speech, of the intention of the government to place a countervailing duty on goods both in the United States and incidentally other countries "the export has attracted general discussion and enthusiasm in industrial circles throughout the Dominion. Canadian Industrial circles have for years been complaining of the competition they have been compelled to meet in the way of foreign "surplus" goods, for which Canada has become a veritable "dumping ground." The countervailing duties are designed to end this by adding an amount equal to the difference between the invoiced price and the real value of 10 to 20 per cent of the duty in several lines and 5 per cent in the iron and steel items.

The Canadian plan is to meet cut prices to the importer by additional tariff duties. Under this plan it will be no longer possible for American producers to sell in Canada cheaper than they sell at home. Canadian Finance Minister Fielding advises the stalwart protectionist doctrine that control of the home market for the home producer is of greater importance than cheapness. Evidently he believes that in the long run nothing is cheap which is purchased abroad when it might have been produced at home. Unquestionably he declares that cheapness may, and probably will, prove to be at best but temporary. While in the end it turns out to be costly and injurious. On this point the Canadian finance minister said in his budget speech:

"We feel bound that the high tariff countries have admitted that method of trade which has now come to be known as 'dumping,' or perhaps the word more frequently known now is 'slaughter.' That is to say, that the trust or combine having obtained command and control of its own market, and finding that it will have a surplus of goods, goes out to obtain command of the neighboring market, and for the purpose of obtaining control of a neighboring market, will with regard to the cost or fair price of all reasonable considerations of the goods; the only principle is that the goods must be sold and the market obtained.

"If these trusts and combines in the high tariff countries would come under obligations with sufficient bonds to guarantee with them goods at lower prices for the next fifty years. It would probably be the part of wisdom for us to close up some of our industries and turn our people in other branches. But supply cuts of the question when when these high tariff trusts and combines send goods into Canada at sacrifice prices they do so for an ulterior purpose. They are not worrying about the good people of Canada. They send the goods here with the hope and the expectation that they will crush out the industries Canadian industries, and then, with the Canadian industry crushed out, what would happen? The cost of cheapness would come and the legitimate and honest profit of a fair cost of cheapness obtained under under such conditions, at the expense of dearness at a very near day, is not a system that we could approve, or that any of us on either side of this House should encourage."

Complaint coincidences with the protectionist claim that only through the upbuilding of home industry can permanent economy be secured, complaint coincidence of the free trade proposition that it pays best to buy in the cheapest market could not be put in words that has long done in this practical statement of the value of domestic competition. Minister Fielding is a protectionist from the ground up, from top to bottom.

In this program there is no hint of a discussion on the part of Canada to invite a larger volume of manufactured imports. On the contrary, Canada proposes to take less and less of such imports. Canada intends to do more of her own work.—American Economist.

The Foreigners' Only Hope.

Mr. Carnegie says Great Britain has maintain her commercial activity, but she must get her food from America. That is regarded as a hint to the Americans to employ their advantage. The only hope of the Foreigner with reference to the home market is in the success of the Democratic party with its promise of low tariffs.—Buffalo News.

Cause and Effect.

If during the coming campaign there comes a time when there is a suspicion that the Democrats may win, let any unprejudiced observer note the effect of such prospect on trade and manufacturing industries, and say for himself whether this talk about the effect of tariff smashing is all "bosh" or not. Everyone knows that a smashed tariff means lower prices, and no one is going to be fool enough to wait on such goods on a falling market.—Clinton (Ind.) Clipsalot.

THE PARAMOUNT ISSUE.

All Signs Point to the Tariff as the Dominant Question of the Year.

In an editorial commenting upon an article contributed in the New York Herald by Congressman Littlefield of Maine the New York Tribune takes exception to the following view expressed by Mr. Littlefield:

"While I have no commission to speak for the Republican party, I think I video a prevailing sentiment among its members when I say that, with the money question relegated to the rear after two decisive trials, the protective tariff again comes to the front as the one great issue upon which the Republican and Democratic parties are fundamentally opposed. This question was brought to the front in both branches of Congress during its closing days, and was discussed on the floor of the Senate and House by members of both parties, who apparently accepted it as the main issue of the coming contest."

The Tribune, which of late has grown rather nonchalant on the tariff question, occasionally speaking out for protection but more often waxing and wobbling in its expressions, is apparently not pleased at the prospect of being called upon to stand up squarely once more for the one vital doctrine which marks the distinct line between the two political parties. It thinks the Maine Congressman has succeeded to the seat of Nelson Dingley and has proved a worthy successor of that eminent Republican, "Mighty mistakes the signs of the times when he predicts that the tariff can become this year, or in any year in the near future, an absorbing and paramount political issue."

The Tribune has not long to wait in order to discover the trend of the matter—whether the attention for 1904 has been correctly read up by the man who was in the thick of our fiercest tariff debates ever heard on the floor of the House of Representatives, or whether "the young editor in the tall tower" is right in his supposition that the Democratic party is not going to renew its attack on protection. We venture the opinion that it is the Tribune and not Congressman Littlefield who "misreads the signs of the times." Everything points to the tariff as the one paramount issue. There is no other issue upon which the Democratic party can unite in an appeal to the country. Tariff reform and promise of efficiency may not be a welcome issue for a newspaper which has shown strong leanings toward tariff tinkering by direct revision and by means of reciprocity in competitive products, but it is going to be the issue just the same, and the Tribune will, we suppose, be found fighting the Democratic contention—until after the election. After that, we would not take the risk of predicting what the Tribune's attitude might be.

Selling Abroad Under the Tariff.

The Democratic free trade press having fallen into triumphant glee on Secretary Shaw's opinion that a small percentage of American products manufactured under the tariff, sold abroad at a lower price than is asked here by the domestic producer, an enfeeble problem for the free traders to solmit in the 17 years of the United States in the near free months might be expressed as follows:

If 1,000,000 American wage-earners are employed in producing articles for home consumption, and 50,000 American wage-earners are employed in producing articles which, to be exported, must be sold at a lower price abroad than could be obtained at home, would the 1,000,000 wage earners rather quit work than have their product sold abroad for less than that of the 1,000,000 sells at home, and would the 1,000,000 rather quit work than have their product sell for more at home than that of the 1,000,000 sells for abroad?

And all the 1,000,000 rather have the whole work done abroad, with no revenue for themselves in the country, than that they should all be employed, and make good wages, live well and lay aside enough out of their earnings to have savings bank credits of "two billion dollars." Perhaps. Then, again, perhaps not.—Exchange.

The Mother of Measles.

The Democracy claims that the tariff is the mother of crusts. By the same token the women are the mothers of measles. The members of the land have children and the children have the measles. Kill all the industries of the land and you will surely kill all the crusts, and shoddy all the mothers of the land and you will just as surely abolish all the measles.—Gov. John A. Iraig, at Iowa Republican State Convention—Burlington Hawkeye.

Escaped an Awful Fate.

Mr. H. Haggins of Melbourne, Fla., writes, "My doctor told me I had consumption and nothing could be done for me. I was given up to die. The offer of a free trial bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, induced me to try it. Results were startling. I am now on the road to recovery and owe all to Dr. King's New Discovery. It surely saved my life." This great cure is guaranteed for all throat and lung and lung diseases by F. G. Hines's Drug Store. Price 50c and $1.00. Trial bottles free.

BIG FRAUD CHARGED.

INSURANCE COMPANIES INVESTIGATE SUPPOSED DEATH.

Arkansas Man Takes His Life Between Times on Life and Then Unexpectedly Dies—Demand for Security—So New York Friends Suspect.

Charges of a $20,000 life insurance fraud were made in Little Rock, Ark., when several companies interested in German National Bank for funds alleged to be on deposit to the credit of Max Ward Lipsky at Searcy, which bank was believed to have been burned to death in a safe by incendiary, May 1 last. Its officers claimed they had in the safe a few days after the supposed death of Lipsky, policies issued by the Mutual Life, Equitable Life, Prudential, New York, A. O. U. W. and Metropolitan. It is now alleged that the German National Bank failed because of fraudulent loans to Lipsky, and that the bank was not burned, but the books and papers were taken from the bank of a man named Fritz Lipsky, who resembled Max Lipsky, and who had been assisting Lipsky and Jacquemin, and it is now positive that the Germans. It has been estimated that Lipsky put up in the Italian colonies in this vicinity half fraudulent mutual insurance policies. The claims, as a result of the scandal, have become particularly light in the case of some of the equitable companies.

DID NOT ENJOY CORNET.

Indignant Protest Unfortunately Mistaken for Applause.

A. H. Kirkland, the Boston enthusiast, who has shown the tend to be one of the farmer's best friends, said recently:

"The toast has been misunderstood in the press as music, misunderstood as a certain friend of mine.

"This chap was making a walking tour, and one night he put up at a little hotel in Florida. Next morning, at breakfast, the landlord said to him:

"'Did you enjoy the cornet playing in the room next to yours last night?'

"'Enjoy it?' my friend shouted savagely. 'I should think not. Why, I spent half the night pounding on the wall to make it stop.'

"'It must have been a misunderstanding,' said the landlord, gently. 'The cornet player told me that the person in the next room supplied him so bountiful that he went over every piece he knew three times.'"

POLITE MAN AND MORGAN.

Didn't Give Latter Chance to Express himself.

J. Pierpont Morgan, who is really an excellent raconteur tells a very good story about a man who apparently possessed a more than average amount of politeness.

Hurriedly leaving the office one Saturday afternoon, the great financier was nearly thrown off his feet by colliding with a man who was rushing from the direction of Broadway.

Mr Morgan was about to say some thing more expressive than polite when the point was raised his hat and said.

"My deity sir, I don't know which of us is to blame for this violent encounter but I am in far too great a hurry to remember it. If I can help you, I beg your pardon. If you can help me don't mention it."

And then he bore away at redoubled speed.

Locating the Blame.

An amateur actor, who has a profound faith in the efficacy of advertising, was complaining after the entertainment, to the chairman of the committee on arrangements.

"Who got up the programmes?" asked the young man.

"I did," replied the chairman. "I suppose you think that your part of the performance was not given sufficient prominence?"

"I don't say that you ought to say anything about the way in which we called attention to you. The audience didn't seem to know you were there."

"On the contrary, a number of my friends told me I was fearfully, especially when I sang that comic song."

"Why, I didn't sing any such song."

"Of course not. And that's where I say you are to blame. How could you expect them to laugh? You didn't state in the programme that it was a comic song."

Ways of the Orient.

There is nothing very remarkable in the report from Japan that a movement is on foot, supported by many eminent men, to found a church of Christian in character, but independent in its views from Buddhism and Christianized and Clericalized in the early "ism" of last century, owing to the momentary ascendency of Shinto which is merely Japan ancestor worship. Shinto, it was prophesied by acute foreign observers that Japan would either adopt Christianity or become frankly materialistic. It will not be strange to any lack of energy on the part of European and American ecclesiastics if the former course is followed. Here is one German pulpit-pounder from a year ago. To make all Japan Christian by other means than moaning is not on the program of the Japanese statesmen of the hour. But that something of the kind should happen within the next twenty years is not nearly so unlikely as many things that have actually happened in this land of realized improbabilities."

Not a Matter of Birthdays.

The passenger in a train the other day was startled by the impassioned strains of a lusty-lowed infant who refused to be pacified or comforted. A very youthful looking "Benny," whose nervous system is in a state of irritable condition, written in silent agony for some time, but at last the endurance gave way and, leaning over the back of his seat he inquired of the mother of the screaming offspring, in a brief interval of comparative calm.

"How old should a child be before it can be taught to keep its mouth shut?"

"Young man," replied the irate mother, with a fierce glance at the unsophisticated boy who had had the temerity to pry her with such an inquiry, "you should ask your own mother that question!"

Wants of Time.

"What is your idea of a truly good wife?" asked the youth.

"A truly good wife," answered the sage, "is one who loves her husband and her country, but doesn't attempt to run either."

Boiling Point at Water.

Water boils at different temperatures, according to the elevation of the sea level. In London water boils practically at 212 degrees Fahr.; in Munich in Germany, at 209.4 degrees; in the City of Mexico at 200 degrees; and in the Himalayas, at an elevation of 30,000 feet above the level of the sea, at 180 degrees. These differences are caused by the varying pressure of the atmosphere at these points.

Italy's Census.

The latest census of the population of Italy shows that the birth rate, which was 37 per 1,000 in 1889, has sunk to 32.47 per 1,000 in 1901.

NORTHERN MICHIGAN.

East Jordan Enterprise: George Nortland, an employee at the cooperage plant, lost the ends of all his fingers on his left hand on Friday last. Dr. H. W. Dicken dressed the injury.

Boyne City is to have a boiler factory on a limited scale, a gentleman from the Soo having purchased two lots of B. A. Jersey on which to build the same. He has considerable work in sight for the Chemical Co., and doubtless enough more will materialize to keep the industry busy the year round.

George Stalnod, Jr., one of the best known residents of Traverse bay, died at his home at Suttons Bay lately after a lingering illness, his death being due to cancer. He leaves a wife and seven children. Mr. Stalnod was born in Germany and came to Canada in 1864. In 1883 he came to Suttons Bay and has resided there continuously since then.

For some time past the East Jordan Lumber Co. has been at work to secure a box factory for East Jordan and the matter is now almost sure to go through. The parties are now engaged in the work, having a factory in the southern part of the state giving employment to one hundred and fifty men and it is believed their plant here will be fully as large.

Smallegan & Smith have rented their big cellar to L. P. Perkett, the big Traverse City potato buyer, who will continue the business of buying and shipping potatoes and apples so well established by the above named firm, as the Central Lake Times. The business will be in charge of Mr. Hastings who has already moved here. It will be welcome news to the farmers to hear that this important business is to be continued and to know that it will be in such reliable hands.

Bellaire Independent: The Grand Rapids cement walk builders that have been building the walks on the railroad right of way at the Fort Marquette crossings on River and Broad streets, have left the walks at the initial "floating" instead of trowelling the surface down to a smooth finish. This is undesired to be an improvement over the smooth surface that is sometimes very slippery in certain conditions of weather. In Grand Rapids, it is said, walks are now being given a "brush surface"—that is, a surface additionally roughened by drawing a stiff brush across the walk from side to side, over the entire surface.

The tragedy of the Norge left its echoing sorrow in Boyne City when the news of the accident reached there, for Axel Anderson had sent for his wife Anna and his three children to come from Norway, and they were to have sailed from Christiania on the ill fated steamship. Fortunately the Anderson relative connections, the steamer sailed without them, but Anderson did not know and gave them up for lost, their names not being among those rescued. But a few days ago he received a letter, stating that his wife and little ones were to sail on a later steamer. The other night he went to the station—"My baby she came to the Falls with three children, two small boys and a girl. I thing them to me! When the train got to the station and Axel saw the "veifi" and children, there was great rejoicing. Axel hugged the little girl, seized the boys and the bundles, embraced Anna, and everyone was happy."

Traverse City Eagle 19th: This morning at 11 o'clock a meeting of the stockholders of the Traverse City State bank was held at which time Julius T. Hannah, the only son of the late Hon. Perry Hannah, was elected president of the institution to succeed his father. Samuel Garland, who has been assistant cashier for 24 years, was promoted to cashier. A. Tracy Lay, the only surviving member of the original firm of Hannah, Lay, & Co., is the vice pres. having held that office since the organization. Informal meetings of the other organizations of which Mr. Perry Hannah was president, were held this morning and in each instance Mr. J. T. Hannah was promoted to the head, which makes him not only president of the bank but also of the Hannah & Lay Co. which includes the flouring mill, Park Place hotel and real estate holdings in this city and also the Hannah & Lay Mercantile Co. Mr. J. T. Hannah is a worthy successor of his magnetic father, having all his life been under his guidance. He is thoroughly in touch with all of his methods and the important duties attendant upon so many mammoth institutions could not have fallen to one more capable of performing them.

Bay View Area May Be Absorbed.

Special.—The Bay View assembly has been given a new lease of life. The assembly association and the Bay View Camp Ground association, heretofore two distinct bodies, have been merged, and hereafter the assembly will be conducted by the camp ground association, whose name has been changed to the Bay View Camp Ground Assembly. The assembly association goes out of existence.

At a recent meeting of 'e as sembly directors Dr. Shier of Detroit, who has been the assembly's head for many years, was succeeded as president by Frank A. Vernor of Detroit. A proposition was made to the Camp Ground association to take over the assets and liabilities of the assembly and to assume entire control of the annual program, and at a meeting of the latter association a committee was appointed to investigate.

It was found that the latter's assets in the way of buildings and furniture, amount to $17,000 and that its liabilities at present are approximately $2,125. The plan to consolidate has now been adopted by the camp ground association, and the trustees directed to borrow money to pay all debts so that the assembly may begin with a clean slate next year.

It was also decided to push the plan for additional amusements at Bay View, and work on tennis courts, as swimming and golf grounds will be rushed. It is estimated that these improvements will cost about $6,000. They will be ready for use next season. F. Gillum Cromer, the assembly superintendent, will probably be retained by the new management.

TO TRANSFORM A WILDERNESS

Irrigation Is Expected to Accomplish a Miracle.

One of the most forbidding portions of the North American continent has been the desert of Idaho in the Snake river region. Little beside sage grass would grow there, and the lands, outside of those for agricultural purposes, have been abandoned to coyotes and rattlesnake reptiles.

But of late a almost miraculous change has taken place in this region. The government engineers thought they saw a promise of fertility there, and the trial was chosen as one of the earliest to be irrigated artificially under the new scheme for which congress has appropriated several million dollars. At an expenditure of $2,000,000, which has been set aside for the construction of great impounding dams and diversion canals above the Minidoka rapids, fully $12,000,000 of taxable property will be created in a year, time. Taking as a basis the last census agricultural figures for Idaho, the 120,000 acres to be reclaimed under this project will, when settled under irrigation, represent the latter value, while the annual earnings of the land will amount to about $3,000,000. With this area cut up into 40-acre farms, as is proposed by the government, a rural population will be created of 7,500, which will bring with it an urban population of probably another 7,000, or 14,000 people.

Lauds Manual Training.

Sir John Cockburn, addressing the British National Association of Manual Training Teachers, said that manual training was the best avenue to intelligence and the best moral training. Half the school hours should be taken up in manual instruction, it helped the memory, which was largely muscular. It formed character, helped children to detect shams and appreciate and its moral benefits were incalculable.

Nearly Frightful His Life.

—Geo. Myler, formerly of Charlevoix, joined his family here yesterday from Detroit, for a short visit. Mrs. Myler, who is the daughter of Mrs. Mercier has been here some time.

—The Democratic argument this year should be printed in the business columns. It is, in brief: "You need not be afraid of us, for if we elect a President and the House, the Republican Senate will keep us from doing any damage."

—Ward & Ward are busy putting up their new sign. It is a big affair and will be a good advertisement for the firm. It is hung from a pole in front of their place of business and can be seen for a long distance.

—Mrs. A. J. McLeod, formerly of Charlevoix, but now of Detroit, is the guest of Mrs. Ida Haney. She came to meet her brother J. A. Cameron, of Texas, who she has not seen for six teen years.

—Mrs. Ann Peterson died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Fred Cooper, in this village, aged 68. The funeral was held Thursday morning, from the home. Mrs. Peterson was also the mother of Peter Peterson, and Mrs. Elmer Ingalls, of Marion.

—The Charlevoix base ball team went to Boyne City on Tuesday and played a game with the Boyne City boys, winning home victory by a score of 5 to 2. Charlevoix battery Stacks and Stripp. It was a lively game, and a creditable one to both teams. The steamer Dexter gave an excursion from here.

—There are two things that are quite essential at this time—your taxes, and your personal subscription. The village needs the former, and we need the latter. Whether it be for one year or three, we must collect to provide for a hard winter. Therefore call in and have a conversation with us, and see—or the trouble of sending you a statement. This is the precursor of a more strenuous invitation.

—F. T. Gielkens, of Fellows, was here over Sunday, visiting his parents.

—A few choice seats for "Her only Sin" are on sale at the "Dry Dock Store."

—Now George Van Pelt can turn his attention to good goods and the electric railway again.

—The Democratic argument this year should be printed in the business columns. It is, in brief: "You need not be afraid of us, for if we elect a President and the House, the Republican Senate will keep us from doing any damage."

—School begins Monday next. School will be called at 9 o'clock, purpose of enrollment and classification, after which school will be dismissed on account of Labor Day. The Normal department opens the same day. There will be nine months school this year.

—England is trying to make off the pallery of free trade which has interfered her workingmen. Immerials, in the American paradise of the workingman, are trying to have us adopt the system which England, after half a century of disastrous trial, is now anxious to discard.

—Seats can be secured at the "Dry Dock Store" for the play "Her Only Sin" which will be presented at Loveday Opera House to-morrow (Friday) night, at the usual hours. Arrangements are made with steamer Dexter for an evening trip to Petoskey, leaving Charlevoix at 6:30 p. m.

—Hon. Fred. M. Warner, republican candidate for governor, accompanied by Hon. F. H. Kelley, republican candidate for auditor general, were in town yesterday. Neither one of the gentlemen have any fear of serious defection from republican ranks in Force, as certain Democrat and sidewalk papers try to make it appear.

—Just as we go to press we are in receipt of a letter from B. J. McNeil of Boyne City, in which he writes as follows: "I am gaining fast now, and have been sitting up for the past few days. Have had my clothes on today, and the doctors say they never saw anyone gain as fast. They say I will be able to leave the hospital in ten days, but of course I cannot go home in my rooms. My foot was amputated about eight inches below the knee. Will be in Charlevoix soon."

—The resort season is beginning to wind up, and it proved to a grand one for Charlevoix, notwithstanding that it has been the worst in years, owing to cool weather. Charlevoix has the satisfaction of knowing that it has eclipsed all Northern Michigan points in its most successful proportions to its hotel facilities. Every hotel, boarding house and cottage has been filled, and during the first half of August people were turned away. It proves that another big hotel will pay, but it should be on the bluff of Lake Michigan, and that means the enlargement of the Bench Hotel—the most possible location.

—The reporter trains between Charlevoix and Petoskey will be discontinued Sept. 11.

—A. T. Barnett & Co. have an enlarged new ad. in this issue that should be ready by all.

—Uncle Sam makes mistakes occasionally, but he has never bought the same political gold brick twice.

—Dr. A. W. Steele, V. S., of Kalamazoo, is here visiting his sisters, Mrs. James Hodgett, and Mrs. John Cook.

—Village treasurer Wood calls attention to the fact that the time limit on payment of taxes is approaching fast and pay your taxes.

—The best argument the Democrats are making to the country is based on their promise not to disturb the Republican legislative achievements.

—The question is now being discussed as to whether a shadow can occupy space. The answer must be in the affirmative to those who believe there is money panic in the St. Louis platform.

—Judge Parker says he will be satisfied with one term as President. The voters will doubtless endorse him that he should be satisfied with one less than a term.

—There will be music services at the M. E. church next Sunday evening. The services will be held in honor of labor. The Charlevoix Trades Council has voted to attend in a body. Addresses by the pastors.

—General Passenger Agent Jos Berghoeffer, of the Manitou Steamship Company, has issued the announcement that the passenger service to and from Frankfort, Mich., will be discontinued on and after Tuesday, Aug. 30.

—Fred M. Warner, republican candidate for governor says: "If I am elected governor, I will sign any primary election bill the legislature may pass during my term of office. I don't believe that the state is ready for a law to attach all political conventions, but I want the people to get what they want."

—By direction of Mr Roosevelt the civil service commission issued orders lately warning federal employes against soliciting or receiving funds for campaign purposes and against contributing any such funds through any school of the government. The memorandum declares it will prosecute any persons found guilty of violating the law. The penalty is a fine of not more than $5,000, or imprisonment for not more than three years, or both in the discretion of the court.

—The Michigan crop report says: "The potato crop is in very good condition in most parts of the state, even in counties where it has been very dry potatoes look well where they have been properly cultivated and sprayed. So far there is little indication of blight but potato bugs should be taken in hand at the first appearance to prevent the disease from doing damage rather than try to stop the spreading of it when it shows itself on the vines. The condition of peas, late in the southern and northern counties is 88, in the central condition and in the state 87.

—R. I. Wentz, chief engineer of the Standard Portland Cement Co., arrived here Tuesday. He will at once begin the survey and location of the branch railroad to the quarries, and work on the grade will be begun at once. The main railway will be the end of the plant is to be placed, and work on the buildings will follow. It is intended, also, to open the work this fall on the time kilns to facilitate construction work. Mr. Wentz informs the successor that work all over the line will be pushed, and that the whole plant will be in operation by June 1st.

—Mr. Dunlap writes a letter to the Traverse City Record on the subject of homes, and therein says that one be homes from poll-y only in dollars in itself—an awful take down for somebody, but who in Traverse City is it? Mr. Dunlap writes that the building boom in progress towards the meeting he hopes to hold in Traverse City in the near future, and has already called on many school owners who were pleased with his views. He is bed to believe after an experience of more than 20 years that the little trolls can be properly regulated for their business. THE FARMERS' FRIENDLY.

The Norwood Picnic an Unqualified Success.

The question now being asked is, If Gaugler, Van Pelt could, under the handicaps of a furious northwest gale, get some people together at Norwood, what could he not have done at a point promising a railroad and good harbor?

Yet that is what George Van Pelt did at Norwood last Thursday. Fully 4,000 people were there, and they all came there by the highways and byways leading into the little town. Steamboat excursions had been arranged from Boyne City, East Jordan, Charlevoix, Northport and Little Traverse bay, but not a boat could get out into the furious sea that rolled in on the shore. Had these excursions been carried out as planned, the number would have been increased by at least 1,000.

The speaking was off, and all features of the planning were entirely successful.

Addresses were delivered by Hon. Fred M. Warner, secretary of state, and republican candidate for governor, and Hon. F. H. Kelley, republican candidate for superintendent of public instruction. Mr. Kelly made a "rousing" talk, as Van Pelt expressed it, and captured the crowd, and Mr. Warner made and excellent impression.

Everybody voted Van Pelt a fine magician in strategy, energy and executive ability. He is the "Creator of the Farmers' Friendly," and the chief motive power in its growth and success.

But, as stupidly, what could he not have done had the gathering place been Charlevoix? It would have location all the steady fairs so attractive ever held in Northern Michigan.

Long life to the Farmers' Friendly Association.

Not Afraid to Meet any Issue.

Republicans are not afraid to meet any issue that their opponents may formulate or try to discuss and confuse the public mind, whether it be Russian peace probability, Warner's record, or "primary reform."

Republicans "stand pat" on Roosevelt. They are proud of him and his record, as they are proud of the achievements of the Republican nation, during whose world history has been written, and National dignity and prosperity preserved.

Michigan republicans are proud of and willing to meet their opponents with Fred M. Warner as their standard bearer. They know that public and private prosperity is unassailable. They know that his official record will tally with every promise made for his party, and they know that he is unassailable by pledges to any man or set of men.

Democrats have made a campaign on apologies to make for any legislation or any controversial policy outlined, with reference to "primary reform," he cannot. As they have in the past, so they will in the future, work out his record of conclusions the chamber of their fancies or the rapturous of dreams. They will have it changed by the false dreams of "nightmare," abandon the essential theme of majority rule in primary election.

Republicans are not afraid to meet the issue, and they will meet it on the political campaign, or fully analyzed in the public press. Republicans believe in every item of their record, and they will defend it, whether it be in the caucus or in the polling booth, and they believe that when this is done true primary reform is accomplished.

Petoskey News: Joe Maddock, of East Jordan, of renowned base ball fame, was in the city Wednesday returning the acquaintance with old friends. Joe leaves Monday for St. Louis, where he will enjoy the eclectic outcome for the world's champion ship. At the conclusion of his stay in St. Louis he goes to Utica where he has accepted a position as music and professor of athletics in the state university.

NORWOOD NEWS.

George H. Van Pelt and family will leave for Chicago Friday evening.

William Chase of Chicago, is here for a few days visiting his parents.

Mrs Chettie Cooper of Six Lakes, is stopping for a few days at R. S. Spaulding's.

The Ladies Aid Society cleared about 80 dollars serving meals at the picnic Thursday.

William Cosens left for Central Lake Monday and will scale logs for Lilkin and Brown.

Mrs. Chas Burrall of Jamestown, N. Y. and Abbie Pearl of Cheboygan Mich. are visiting friends at Norwood.

Mrs. Carruthers and Children formerly of this place, but now living at Petoskey, are stopping at Parker McIntyre's.

Mrs. Ainsworth and family of Boyne City, and Herr, Wynne and family of Central Lake were here to attend the picnic.

Allen Greenman and wife who are to teach the school at Norwood, have moved here, and have rooms with Mrs. Bennett where they will commence the second week in September.

Hon. F. H. Kelley of Detroit candidate for Superintendent of Public instruction delivered the address, and it was a corker. Mr. Kelley has the reputation of being one of the best speakers in the state, and he surely lost none of his reputation by his effort here. It was a little amusing in one respect. It was a hot political speech from start to finish but was presented in such a way that few if any could be offended and he said, he had the consent of Van Pelt to discuss the safety valve, and let him go, and he did.

There were between 3 and 4 thousand people at the picnic Thursday and would have been 1000 more if boats could have run. It was a miserable, unpleasant day, but there was a big crowd for all that. Hon. Fred M. Warner was present and spoke for 15 or 20 minutes and presented his views on primary election reform which was well received. Fred Warner wherever he may go will always make a lot of friends whether they agree with him in politics or not. I have known him for the past 12 years, and feel safe in saying he has more personal friends in the state than any other public man, and if elected which he will be by a large majority, he will make a model governor, that no one will be ashamed of or for which any apology will have to be made.

TOWN IS IMPERILED.

UNKNOWN PERSONS TRY TO BLOW UP RESERVOIR.

Bad Night Every Night Since Mine's Office and Surroundings Caught Fire. Would Have Been Sorry in Fearful Flood. Peculiar Business of Brothers.

An attempt was made Tuesday night to blow up the dam of the Mine's reservoir, which is situated above the mine and supplies the town with water. The damage was not huge enough to destroy the dam or the water supply of the town. There has been much speculation as to the motive for the attempt, some people thinking it was a mere piece of malicious mischief, others that it was done by those who wish to drive the Mine's management from the town. The dam is of earth, and the charge of dynamite was placed in the middle of it, and was so placed that it would have been very difficult to find it. The dynamite was exploded at about 10 o'clock Tuesday night, and was heard by many people in the town. The dam was not much injured, and the water in the reservoir was not lowered to any great extent. The Mine's management is taking every precaution to prevent any further attempts of this sort being made, and has placed a guard at the reservoir.

The Mine's office and its surroundings caught fire about 7 o'clock Tuesday night, and the fire was not extinguished until about 11 o'clock. The office is a small one-story building, and is situated on the hill above the town. The fire was discovered by a passer-by who was going to the Mine's office to see Mr. Brothers, the Mine's superintendent, on some business, and he at once ran to the office and called Mr. Brothers, who was in the office at the time, and who had not noticed the fire. Mr. Brothers ran into the office and got his coat, which was hanging on a peg near the door, and was then obliged to leave the building, as the flames had spread so rapidly that he was in danger of being cut off by them. He had to go around the building to get out, and by the time he had reached the door the flames had spread so that he was obliged to run through them to get out, and his coat was scorched and he was slightly burned about the face and hands. The office was a total loss, and the fire had spread to the Mine's office, which is a large one-story building, and the roof of it was on fire when the alarm was given. The fire department was called out, and by hard work succeeded in putting out the fire before it had spread very far. The Mine's office is a large one-story building, and is one of the most substantially built business buildings in the town. It is built of brick, and is considered fire proof. The Mine's office is a small one-story building, and is of no great value. The Mine's office and its contents were insured for $1,000, and the Mine's office for $1,500. The Mine's office was insured for $1,000, and the Mine's office for $1,500. The Mine's office was insured for $1,000, and the Mine's office for $1,500. The Mine's office was

SHELTER FOR TRUSTS

THE BIGGEST OF THEM SEEK REPUBLICAN DOWNFALL.

Havemeyer, Belmont and Other Monopoly Magnates Are Working Hard for the Election of a Democrat as President of the United States.

Will the free trade newspapers and Democratic campaigners who are trying to make a connection with the idea that "protection is the mother of the trusts" continue only, then, the trusts themselves are formed with the Republican Administration and party? Is the protection tariff law today what it was a year ago and two years ago and three years ago? If the alleged tariff law is the law, then, if Republican law belongs, surely it can be said that Republicans are responsible for the existence of the trusts. Further, if the Republican party has made the tariff law what it was a year ago and two years ago and three years ago, then it is the Republican party which has created the trusts. Is it so? What is the difference, we make a tariff schedule which shall cover one years, and the Democratic party enforces schedule, the Democrats do not hesitate to put hundreds of various into material which they find and which they know that if they and others, them so lower the rates, or to change the standard of duties, or to change the standard of duties, or to change the standard of duties

But in the middle of the night all the kingdoms suddenly changed into a worse. The pain in the head was succeeded by a fearful oppression and sickness, which was then sufficient torture trying to get his breath. Sometimes fancy like this coming restlessness from pulse to pulse.

When the doctor came early the morning he agonized very much moreover, all at the chance for the worse. He was astonished if they had not administered an overdose of morphine. Mary—and that he had put the blame on his master, and the doctor's directions had been strictly followed.

The doctor after leaving examined Monsieur, and found his breathing heavy and irregular, accompanied by a slight stiffness of spirits, he then retired.

When the doctor returned early the morning he found the patient in the bed. His Mamzel gone on better. In mind and body he was quite changed, his stupor has improved, and he was able to recognize his own relations, and even recollect the day preceding.

He then asked the doctor if he was alive—living in another for every month and he confession to make. Long practice in confession to make. Long practice in confession to make. Long practice in

IT IS NOT NEEDED.

Trade With Canada Doing Well Enough Without Aid or Reciprocity.

It is impossible to reverse the natural order of things, and this truth much good in trade as in physical law. There has been a great deal said about the favored nation trade, about the increased commerce with foreign countries that comes as a result of the Dingleyite tariffs and all the rest, but the facts do not bear out the explanations of the theorists. The high protective tariff of the United States which went into operation seven years ago, was bound to decrease our trade with other nations, according to the free trade calculations and fancies, but it did not. The schedules of that tariff went into operation and our trade with every country that was supposed to be its bane by the Anti-tariff has increased our exports of American products. Reciprocity was forced through Congress on behalf of Cuba, and the trade of this country with Cuba has not increased so rapidly as trade between Cuba and the nations of Europe. Great Britain, with a Cobden Danais took so much from the United states in the way of manufactured products, and Canada kicked because the United States would not enter into a reciprocity arrangement with her, and the result was a preferential tariff by Canada in favor of British made goods. The tariff, which was 12½ per cent in 1897, has been advanced from time to time until last year which it was much 21 ad per cent, but it has not decreased the export of American goods to Canada. From 1897 to 1903 the increase in American exports into Canada was from $11,000,000 to $24,000,000, an increase of $13,000,000. The increase in exports from Great Britain into Canada that period was from $19,000,000 to $23,000,000, an increase of $4,000,000. That is, the American increase was $13,000,000 greater for America than for Great Britain, and yet there was a preferential tariff in favor of Great Britain amounting to from 12 to 21 per cent. With these figures before the people it is not evident that the cry of reciprocity Cuba cost, or that the policy that has so long insured to the manufacturers of this country and its recipients of trade with foreign nations is doomed to the fate of the policy of the Republican party? Let the Democrats go what they can, the tariff is safe for them, they know it, they cannot wipe out these figures taken from the tables of American industry and increase of commerce that have grown up the first of each Republican that the Republican system is the one that is approved of by common sense.—Detroit Tribune-Tribune.

Neither Safe Nor Sound.

The cheap cry that Parker has stated Rooseveltism on the ship issue, now calls to be on that great question of the tariff. It is neither safe nor sound. He might not turn the country upside down on the money standard, but he would tear it from end to end when it came to revising the tariff.

Cleveland was perfectly sound on gold, but he was unsafe and unsound on tariff reform.

Cleveland stood for the free coinage of every corner to keep the workingmen from starvation.

Parker stands for precisely the same condition.

What is needed in the closed mill and the shuttered factory that should appeal to the people as to real, sound financial sense, the Connecticut and New Jersey over to the Democracy and rolling mills and factories the latable?

The evidences of an insane stampede to Parker are not visible.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Would Cost More.

The American manufacturers, running their plants on full time, giving employment to laborers by the million, make at times more articles than can be used in our home market. This surplus is sold in the world at large for what it will bring. Thus labor is kept in constant employ and plants are run to their capacity. If this were not done, the plants would have to close down whenever the market was glutted, laborers would be out of employ, and the capital invested would be idle. Under a scale of protection that would require each industry—artistry and idleness. The article produced would cost more in this country than they do under the present system, and the people would be definitely woven of in every way; labor would earn less, and would lost time, and a repetition of the disastrous Cleveland times of 1893 to 1897 would come.—Salt Lake Tribune.

McKinley's Sentiments.

Now comes the Republicans nominated in national convention in 1896, and they virtually incorporate McKinley's words in their platform of principles, as follows: "We have rejected utterly our foreign markets, and we believe in the adoption of all practicable methods for their further extension, including commercial reciprocity wherever reciprocal arrangements can be perfected consistent with the principle of protection and without injury to American agriculture, American labor or any American industry."

Exactly the sentiments of President McKinley, three years ago. They are just as good to-day as they were then, and show nothing of the latter in the protective tariff principle advocated by the Republican—Wheeling Intelligencer.

Rack-Renting Landlord.

The greatest man in Columbus, Ohio, is the ninth side. Here is the evidence: Some time ago a venerable building a property which called him in every particular except that the roof was not painted with a certain element it put one in at his own expense, the landlord refusing to do so. This he did, and when completed it increased rent thirty dollars. Tenants have never since the landlord raised the rent $2 on the ninth account of the improvement.

NORTHERN MICHIGAN.

The Hankey Milling Company, of Petoskey, has filed articles of incorporation, with a capitalization of $200,000.

As a result of the work done at the recent Indian camp meeting 20 Indian children will leave next week for a three years' course at the government school at Genoa, Neb.

Talk about the efficacy of advertising! Last week some chap at Boyne Falls sent a correspondence letter to the papers in a neighboring city in which he stated that Boyne Falls wanted a newspaper. And already J. H. Fraser of Traverse City has purchased the plant of the Leader at that place and will revive the paper so that Boyne Falls will again have a local newspaper.

The reporter has received definite and reliable information to the effect that the Petoskey Lumber Company have an option on land adjoining plotting the purchase of the Carey Hoop Company site and buildings at Harbor Springs for the purpose of building a plant to manufacture the product of their timber lands in Emmet county. The company has large holding of timber lands in this county and is composed of local men with ample capital to carry out any business undertaking proposing that they may undertake.

The tenth annual gathering of the Northwestern Association of U. C. T. closed Wednesday at Mancelona. Large delegations were in attendance from Charlevoix, Boyne City, Bellaire, Kalkaska and Traverse City. The parade was one of the finest ever seen in Mancelona. Gov. Hazel Lewis was the guest of honor. Mrs. Ida M. Rally of this city all delivered addresses. Hon. Howard Lewis was elected president, Samuel Adams of Bellaire secretary. Two games of base ball were played between Kalkaska and Bellaire, and Traverse City and East Jordan. Kalkaska and East Jordan winning.

The people of Boyne City have started a movement to expand their territory and a petition was this week presented to the council to enlarge the village limits by taking in about three square miles of outlying territory having a population of some 450 people and the matter will come up for action before the coming session of the County Board. The territory to be added takes in the Bay Springs territory of the gifted village of Spring Harbor and the north half of sections two and three in Wilson township and gives to Boyne City a territory of some five square miles—enough to make a good city.

Cadillac News: Reports received by the News and Express from its country correspondents seem to indicate that the drought has affected the potato crop and that the consequent decrease in yield, as compared with July expectations and the yield of last year, will be from twenty-five to thirty-five percent. This suggestion may be an exaggeration of the condition, as it applies to this northern country, but it would seem to presage the possibility of a potato shortage later in the season when the returns are all in from the fields and farms in this and adjoining counties in this section of the state.

Traverse City Eagle. The largest rainbow trout ever caught in this vicinity was captured yesterday in Boardman lake and is being on exhibition today at Inchrell's saloon. The fish measures 31 inches in length and weighed 14 pounds when caught. It was caught by a boy and was secured from him by Mr. Inchrell, who will send it to Detroit to be stuffed and it will make a notable addition to the number of big ones he has already stuffed. The fish is taken from long at that the one caught some time ago and which weighed 16 pounds and is much thicker and broader. It is about nine inches from back to belly and about four inches thick.

Petoskey News. The many enthusiastic patrons of base ball in the city, who have been made somewhat dissatisfied by the playing of the team will be glad to learn that the management, realizing that a change must of necessity be made, has released all of the members of the team, with the exception of Pitcher Wattrick and Fire Baseman Hoffman. The change is made necessary for obvious reasons The management, also appreciating the necessity of the city's having a fast base ball team, and one which will be a credit to the city as well as northern Michigan, have signed the entire Lodington team, who will play out the balance of the season for Petoskey. The Ludington team claims the championship and are a bunch of clean gentlemanly young fellows.

The Poor House Visited.

Commissioner Gillespie visited the County Poor House August 29. He reports favorably on the condition as to the care of the inmates. The house has never been completed, and the deficiencies are very plain. It is evident that, especially in a severe winter, the inmates cannot be kept warm, the furnace and radiators are not adequate.

A properly equipped bath room is a great necessity. Instead of outside privies, water closets are wanted, especially for the aged and sick. The old building should be fitted up for a hospital, this would involve slight expense, lamps should be suspended to save exposure to conflagration. There is no newspaper. An occasional visit by a clergyman would be a comfort to the inmates. It may be suggested that it would be a charitable work for the ladies of East Jordan to make an occasional call on the paupers and read to them.

High Average.

There is constant increase in railroad mileage according to the Railway Age of Chicago. The amount of track laid during the first half of the year indicates that the mileage to be constructed during the year will approximate 4,000. This, though not equal to the gross mileage of 1903, is still above the average of ten years, the average of ten tariff years being about 3,000.

Railroad Gains.

The gain in gross and net earnings of more railroads for June was more satisfactory and indicates that the tide has again turned. The total gross earnings of the Wabash road was nearly $2,000,000 more during the fiscal year 1903 than the present year. The passenger earnings show a gain of 14.7 per cent and the freight earnings a gain of 22 per cent.

Prosperity and Plenty.

Plenty to the number of 100,000 and valued at $100,000,000 were made and sold in this country the past year. This would indicate prosperity indeed, and among the farmers and wage earners, most of whom were able to possess such an instrument for the first time.

Moribund.

Reciprocity is dead! That is beyond question. It had a brief but not a glorious career; but no treaty a the 20-hour President may present and Senate will ever secure the necessary twothirds majority. It will be useless to try it.—Detroit Journal Republican.

Its Only Friends.

The Dingley tariff seems to have no friends at all there. Even the Republican party and the American people—Buffalo City Journal.

Tragedy Averted.

"Just in the nick of time our little boy was saved," writes W. Wakkie of Pleasant City, Ohio "Pneumonia had played and havoc with him and a terrible cough set in besides. Doctors treated him, but he grew worse every day. At length we tried Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, and our darling was saved. He's now sound, and well." Everybody ought to know, it's the only sure cure for Coughs, Colds and all Lung disease. Guaranteed by F. H. Hines & Co. Druggist. Price 50c and $1.00. Trial bottles free.

Very Easy Indeed.

It will be a comparatively easy matter to expand a national prohibition sentiment to the extension of a tariff which cannot be so easily and effectively manufactured and taxed "point with pride journalists." Indeed, the happy results that would follow anything in the line of revenue from a tariff for general revenue to Mugwumps is easy.

The Republican party on the other hand, is the party of the tariff, and regards the energy doing a great thing when it feels familiar with—Chicago Inter Ocean.

Value of Regular Living.

To live long go into the workhouse, says an English newspaper. It is the quiet life on the body of an old fogy, and 96 years, who died in the Hackney infirmary, the coroner remarked that often when he opened was surprised at the very old persons he had seen that they had been in the workhouse or infirmary. Regular living was conducive to longevity.

Mme Fanvel listened to Verdoux with a face from some more attentive and expressive but Her glance was directed to Nina. Her lips were set and hard. GREAT LIBERALITY

DEMOCRATS FAVOR LIBERAL TRADE ARRANGEMENT.

They Are Always Extremely Liberal to People of All Countries Excepting Their Own When Intrusted with the Responsibility of Tariff Making.

"We favor liberal trade arrangements with Canada and with peoples of other countries where they can be entered into with benefit to American agriculture, manufactures, mining or commerce—Democratic platform, 1904.

Liberal to whom? Why, to the Democrats and peoples of other countries of course. The Democratic party has an unlovely record of liberality to foreigners in the shape of low duties and no duties on importations from foreign countries that compete with domestic production.

A liberal trade treaty with Canada, for example, would mean free trade in natural products only. Canada has given ample notice that she will not consent to free trade in, or even a reduction of tariff upon, manufactures from the United States. So, if the Democratic party is going to be liberal in making a trade treaty, it is contrived in the removal of tariff duties upon Canadian products of the farm, the fishery, the forest and the mine.

The Democratic party would be liberal toward the producers of Canadian wheat to enhance them the disposal of their cheaper grain, from Atlantic ports, instead of being obliged to ship them to Liverpool. But what about the wheat growers of the United States who farm higher-priced lands and pay double the Canadian wages for farm labor—how would they fare under this arrangement of cheaper wheat from the cheaper and more productive soil of the Canadian Northwest? How would the New England and New York market gardeners fare as against the competition of cheaper Canadian producers who would be free from duty? How would the border state farmers fare who depend upon the home market for their hay, cattle, horses, poultry, eggs, etc.?

The Democratic party wants to be liberal toward the Canadians who want to sell their lumber, their coal, their iron ores and their fish to the American market. But how about the lumber workers of Idaho, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota and Washington? How about the coal miners of North Dakota, Montana, Wyoming and Washington? How about the thousands of New England families who are supported by the fishing industry? Every one of the interests named would suffer sorely from the unrestricted competition of cheaper labor and lower market values in Canada.

It is known that the liberal policy of the Democratic party with reference to foreigners, as carried out in the Democratic tariff law of 1894, cost the farmers of the United States ten billion dollars in four years.

Foreigners have reason to admire Democratic liberality. There is not a foreign producing country in the world today that would not rejoice over a Democratic victory in the election of 1904. Every one of them would realize that such a victory would mean lower tariffs and the privilege of taking possession of the greatest of the world's markets. Americans, however, have no such cause to welcome the advent of Democratic liberality. The Democratic party never yet passed a tariff law that was liberal to American producers, and it never will.

Sound Economy.

The very fact that our manufacturers can invade the foreign market is a proof of the success of protection in firmly establishing the iron and steel industry. It has reached the position in which it can use foreign trade as a secondary market in which to dispose of surplus production. Of course, that means a bargain price, but it does not follow that the home consumer is really disadvantaged. It may mean to us also the establishment of prices would fluctuate severely, and the chances are that domestic buyers would have to pay more than they do even if paying more than is charged upon occasional lots sold abroad. In the German Reichstag some time ago the manufacturers of that country were commended for their enterprise in finding their goods in foreign markets by cutting rates, on the ground that they were thus enabled to keep their factories going and to furnish employment to their workmen. Instead of reviling the manufacturers for such conduct, it was held that it was sound economy, and that the net result of the process was a lower rate to home consumers than would otherwise be the case. The same reasoning holds good in this country also.—Pittsburg Commercial Gazette.

Will Not Deceive the Masses.

This abandonment of principles, this catering to the top front, interests of New York, will not deceive the masses. There was some glory in going down to defeat with an honorable consistency. There can be no glory in winning with a Democracy that has outlifted itself, that has transcended its principles, that has renounced its past and now parades in gaudy and false colors. The common people will not readily recognize the new dress, and when it comes to expressing their opinion at the polls, they will vote for the man who is consistently through and who stands for a party that is not ashamed of some of its past record or present pronouncements and that flaws nothing a virile policy for the future.—Toledo Blade.

No Objection.

Mr. Parker makes a great deal of fuss about his combination of the gold plank from the Democratic platform, but we have heard no serious outcry against it in the convention's declaration that the Democratic party is hostile to protection.—San Francisco Chronicle.

GO ABOUT AS HOBOES,

CHICAGO DETECTIVES TRAVEL WITH TRAMPS.

Seek Clue to Robber Who Held Up Illinois Central Train Near Here in Sunday Night—Lynched for Death Assault in Lorimer Ward.

After three weeks of fishing, which has ranged several hundred miles and visited a dozen States, Sergeant Massey of the Chicago police department and John Howe detective, accompanied by Thomas Conley, Illinois Central fireman, have returned from a fruitless search for the bandits who held up the Diamond Special on the night of Aug. 10 near Lake Forest. In disguise as tramps the officers rode the bumpers of freight trains, in the hope that they might overhear some band or hobo camp talk of the robbery. They went from place to place, from one town to another and from city to city, but they found no trace of the bandits.

"I was on a bumper I don't know how many times," said Howe, "and I was in a jungle or at least one hobo camp every night for a week. But I knew and I thought the men I was with knew that I was as good as any of them. I had on the rags and I knew how to talk and act like a hobo. I'm sure I was accepted as one of them. I'm sure I could have stayed with them as long as I wanted to. I'm sure I could have gone from place to place with them and they would never have suspected that I was a detective. I'm sure I could have gone to Canada with them if I had wanted to. I'm sure I could have gone to the Pacific Coast with them if I had wanted to. I'm sure I could have gone to Chicago with them if I had wanted to. I'm sure I could have gone to Kansas City with them if I had wanted to. THE TARIFF AND EXPORTS.

Increasing Sales of Manufactured Articles to Foreign Countries.

It is an argument with the opponents of protection that our tariff policy is an obstacle to exports, and they urge that if we would reduce the tariff we would greatly increase the amount of our products sent to foreign countries. This is purely and simply a hypothetical proposition. Not only is there nothing to our knowledge to justify it, but on the contrary all the statistics of our foreign commerce show that the proposition is fallacious.

As a matter of fact we do not sell more abroad by reason of the fact that we buy more abroad. The statistics show quite the contrary. For example, those for the last fiscal year place our exports at several hundred of millions in excess of our imports, and this has been the case for a number of years past, instead of increasing our imports, the figures for the last fiscal year show that there was a decrease as compared with the preceding year, while at the same time there was a growth of exports. The balance of trade during the year was very largely in favor of this country, and what is essentially similar in the fact that the increase in exports was of manufactures, the exports of agricultural products having fallen off.

In view of such facts what becomes of the democratic contention that our tariff law operates against the exportation of our manufactures? Is it not absolutely obvious that there is nothing in such a claim? The present tariff law has been in operation since 1897. In that period of seven years there has been a steady and uninterrupted growth of the exports of our manufactures. Last year the value of those products sent abroad was nearly if not quite double what it was five years ago. Indeed, Could any stronger or more convincing fact be desired to prove the falsity of the statement that our tariff law is such a barrier to the exports of our manufactures? Is not the fact that we are exporting more manufactures than ever before a sufficient answer to those who assert that the policy which protects American industry and American labor is an obstacle to our trade with foreign countries? The statistics of the trade for the last fiscal year will be to be for an unanswerable argument to the Democratic contention that our tariff law is inimical to our exports of manufactures.—Omaha Bee.

A Texas Prediction.

The tariff plank prepared by the subcommittee and reported to the full committee would have been more acceptable to the Hanna. The substitute which was adopted and which appears in the platform declares that protection is robbery. This is the Bailey-Bryan idea, and Bailey and Bryan at heart are free traders. It is not the idea of the tariff reformers of the East or the Southeast, who are committed to a tariff for revenue and protection for local industries and local singles. Louisiana demands protection for sugar, Alabama and Tennessee for iron and coal, and North Carolina and South Carolina for the output of their cotton mills. Free trade is not the picturesque language of old Bill Allen of Ohio. "It is a damn horrible heresy," the reformers may who, free radics never in this country. Ten years hence the Southern wing of the Democratic party will declare for a protective tariff.—Dallas Herald.

A Story of Russian Power

CHAPTER I.

It is a night of midnight—a night in June, darker than the palm of my hand. I remember that the hot air of the day, pent up and stifling, had not yet cooled, and that the stars were faint and pale, as if veiled by a mist of vapour.

In an instant I felt a strong force put forth upon me, and I was lifted from my feet. There thousands upon thousands were at my side, and I was carried along with them, as a straw is carried along by a rushing torrent. I could not resist, I could not even think of a single thing to do.

Yet I was not in any strong force myself. I was alone, I was a boy of sixteen, and I was a student of the University of Moscow. Nor was I in any great danger, for I was a Russian, and all the Russians, feeling the warm, or, if I may call it, the hot, sympathy of one another, were in a good humour. I was, and had always been, a student of a quiet, studious, and even timid disposition, and I had a very great fear of being crushed to death in a crowd. Yet I was not afraid, I was not even nervous, I was only a little excited, and I was very, very sorry for my father.

I had left my father in his study, and I had left him in a state of great anxiety and perplexity. He had been expecting a visit from a friend, a Polish nobleman, who was in great danger, and he was waiting for his coming when I had left the house to join the crowd of students who were going to the University to hear the news that was to be given to them by the Rector.

A PERMANENT INSTITUTION.

Past, Present and Future of the Grange—Its Cause to Stay.

The Lows Farmer, in an editorial entitled "The Living Grange, gives an interesting review of the past, present and future of the Grange in that state. It says:

Up other pages you will find an article from the Master of the Grange—its origin in the southwest and how it gained a foothold in this state which farmers were suffering, its permanent influence in matters as allows to the politicos to measure questions against legislation, amongst members—and its the wrecking of the grange in its place, which farmers have lost sight of. Its loss and the growth of the Farmers' Union, and the growth of the grange in the southern states, is the practical outcome of developing the social and intellectual side of the farmer's life.

It may be noted in passing that not only the greatest activities in the farmer circle of the land the right of the farmer to organize, but the right of the farmer to organize in the manufacturing business that have been so effective in making manufacturing corporations pay for the protection they have been in the habit of from discriminative legislation, monopolies and trusts, and yet the farmer has been from all of these activities, and should have been so from the beginning, left to shift for himself, and has been taken to pose himself as a class, and to be treated as such, and to be made, apparently, for some reason, the only class of citizens who have not been allowed to organize for their protection, and yet the farmer is the only class of citizens who have been taken to pose themselves as a class, and then, apparently for social purposes, for some reason, the only class of citizens who have

THROWN FROM TRACK

TRAIN DERAILED BY LARGE BOULDER ON RAILS.

Attempt at Wrecking to South Bend Cause Heavy Damage, but No Lives Are Lost—Dead Limb Is Taken Out for $500 an Arm.

A large stone placed on the Michigan Central tracks at South Bend Ind. Sunday night came very near wrecking three a freight train from the south and a light backing into the yards. The train carried a heavy load of merchandise and fortunately not crushed but a large freight car ahead of the engine was thrown from the track. Engineer Mrs. George Sharp of Niles, Mich., who was at the throttle, failed to see the stone in time to stop the train, but she did see the stone and warned her fireman to jump. The fireman jumped to the ground and was bruised and cut by the fall.

Engineer Sharp, who is a woman, stuck to her engine and brought the train to a stop. The stone had been placed on the rails between the south switch and the yard limit.

The train was made up in South Bend and was bound for Michigan City. The train was in charge of Conductor Ed. Hoffman, of Michigan City.

The stone was a boulder and was placed on the rails between the south switch and the yard limit.

SCHOOL NOTES.

Dr. Hyslop gave the high school at Normal students an inspiring and instructive talk on Wednesday morning on the meaning of a "fuller education." A series of such talks will be continued throughout the year.

Some of the teachers and high school girls have organized a team for basket-ball and the indoor games will be played in the vacant south-east room of the McKinley building. With suits adopted to the game, this will give the girls nearly all the advantages the boys find in athletics.

Classes in mechanical and decorative drawing, penmanship, music, spelling, and public speaking are begun in the high school. Each student will be expected to take at least two of these subjects unless excused on the parent's request. All who are weak in spelling and writing will be required to include these exercises.

The high school team plays a football game with Petoskey on Saturday afternoon on the Nettleton grounds, south of the Washington School. Admission tickets will be sold on the streets and at the ground. Buy one and wear it in your hat. The boys need a fund for improving the ground.

The school census this year numbers 70 persons between five and twenty years of age. A large proportion of these are of course beyond the age of required attendance at school. The total enrollment on Wednesday morning in the grades below the high school was 455, and in the high schools 77. The latter department will probably not be as large as usual on account of the smaller size of the new ninth grade, but it is larger than many other high schools in larger towns than Charlevoix. A few students between 7 and 15 years have not yet enrolled. Their parents must show good cause for their absence to the truant officer within a week.

The grade teachers have begun to visit the homes of all their children, for the purpose of getting better acquainted with parents. This kind of acquaintance will prevent many little misunderstandings that might otherwise arise, and it is hoped that the fathers and mothers will find time to visit the rooms of their children in school. It is important to do this at the beginning and near the end of the school year in order to get a clear idea of the progress accomplished. If you are not satisfied that your boy or girl is just where he should be, visit his room, unexpectedly, and see how his recitations and study compares with others in the class. There cannot be any chance of the facts being misrepresented to you in this way, and the teachers welcome such visits.

More Rioting.

Disturbances of strikers are not nearly so grave as an individual disorder of the system. Overwork, loss of sleep, nervous tension will be followed by utter collapse, unless a reliable remedy is immediately employed. There's nothing so efficient to cure disorders of the liver and kidneys as Electric Bitters. It's a wonderful tonic, and effective nerve-and the greatest all-around medicine for run down system it dispels Nervousness, Rheumatism and Neuralgia and expels Malaria germs only 50c. and satisfactory guaranteed by F. Tragedy Averted.

"Just in the nick of time our little boy was saved" writes W. Watkins of Pleasant City, Ohio. "Pneumonia had played and kept with him and a terrible cough and its brackish. Doctors treated him, but he grew worse every day. At length we tried Dr King's New Discovery for Consumption, and our darling was saved. He's now sound, and well." Everybody ought to know, it's the only sure cure for Coughs, Colds and all Lung Disease. Guaranteed by F. G. Hines & Co. Druggists. Price 50c and $1.00. Trial bottles free.

Had a Collision, Was Raked Fore and Aft and Finally Anchored in Detroit Police Court.

"Hill" Creggins, old sailor, who gave his port as Cleveland, was up before Judge Winslow in Detroit Thursday, charged with being a disorderly person.

"Tell you how it happened" said Hill to the court. "I just made port yesterday. In th' evenin' I got aboard a mate o' lickin' down near th' docks. About seven o'clock it got foggy up above; I slipped my moorin's and set a course for my uncle's place, near the fort. It was pretty hazy weather, judge, but I was feelin' considerable and so fine for'rd, when I sighted a craft makin' for me boat a quarter off to port.

"I didn't anticipate no collision, because she had lots o' sea room, and I kept to my course. As we got closer I saw the other fellow ain't steady at the wheel, an' I edges off a little, but he wouldn't take no room, and bears right down on me. At that I shoves me helm hard over and runs off to port, but he comes about an' crosses me bows an' then, makin' best seven knots, he rims his bow apt into me top hamper and wrecks me aloft," and here the old tar exhibited a pair of black eyes to the court, and pointed in a nose that was slightly out of shape.

"He done me considerable damage, judge, but he didn't get me out o' action, an' in course I engages him. I was makin' tolerable execution, too, when he lets out a couple o' distress signals, but I wouldn' show him no quarter till he lowers his colors.

"Then then a cop hove to, and the other craft claps on sail an' tows her clear, when the jigger comes up with me. In course, I was disabled and couldn't pursue him, and the office didn't pay no attention to my signals, but he just tows me aboard and I fetches up at the Woodbridge street anchorage.

"It wa'n't my fault, judge. I wouldn't o' scraped the paint on that cuss if he'd a steadied his wheel, but he runs foul o' me when I'm layin' in the trough. You won't make no mistake letin' me go, judge. I'll leave port this afternoon."

With that assurance the court let him off and when last seen he was bowling along before a good breeze with fair prospects of making the city limits before noon.

—Evidences are multiplying that Fred. M. Warner, the republican candidate for governor is gaining in strength every day. When the opera passes it will be found that Mr. Warner will satisfy every requirement, whether it be for "primary reform" possessing ordinary elements of sanity, or any other measures that will regulate or correct evils in the body politic. The talk about Mr. Warner being a "machine" candidate is the veriest nonsense. A chronic political kicker did always say nonsense. True to Warner stands for an honest and intelligent administration of public affairs, and the treater we approach election the more will the people be convinced of it.

—Central Lake Torch: Stockholders of the Elk Portland Cement Co. of this dispute have been notified of a meeting to be held at Petoskey on the 28th of this month at which time some action is recommended to be taken to close up its affairs. The company has lost money from the start and could hope for no more in its present capital and the officers are unable to sell any more bonds or raise money. Some of the stock was used to manufacture cement from rock but marl cement was soon experimented by your correspondent, and as a factory built in low marl cannot use rock an effort was made to reconstruct the plant but all enough money was available for the purpose and the plant has made cement at a loss in consequence.

—The crew of the little schooner Swan, including Capt. George H. Chandler, his wife and daughter, arrived at Chicago Monday morning, in a similar manner, and reported the Swan 17 miles inside the lower end of Lake Michigan, in the gale early last week. Capt. Chandler owned no other vessel than the Swan. It was his sole possession. When the family arrived in Chicago they had only the clothing worn when wrecked. The Swan was used in cruising along the shore gathering up farm produce, which was taken to Chicago market. It was anchored near Scott's Point when the gale struck the boat. Capt. Chandler went ashore during the day leaving his boat at what he thought was safe anchorage, not intending to return until the following morning. The northeast storm struck the boat about midnight, causing it to drag anchor and was brought up against an old pier. The two women and the seaman worked all night with pike poles to keep their craft from pounding to pieces. They were drenched with rain, while great baleouses cut their faces. At dawn fishermen discovered their plight, and at the risk of their lives went to their rescue. The people were in the water up to their armpits when rescued. They were almost overcome with the cold and exhaustion. The fourthers live in Hesperia, Michigan. The Swan is well known here.

GROUND BROKEN

The Standard Portland Cement Co. Begin Active Construction Operations.

"Standard Portland Cement Co.," are the talismanic words standing out in conspicuous letters over the door of the old bank building, now occupied by that corporation as headquarters, with Mr. W. H. Malone, late of Bay City, in temporary charge.

Mr. Weale, consulting and constructing engineer, arrived Saturday, and Monday morning took the field in charge of a surveying party of fifteen men. The work of locating and clearing the branch railway line from Pine Lake to the quarries will be pushed forward. This line will be a little over two miles in length. A surveying and locating line fifteen feet wide is being cut out. Once the line is located, the right of way, fifty feet wide will be cleared and graded, from 60 to 75 men to be employed. Work will proceed as rapidly as possible until the road is fully ready for the rolling stock. Both the rails, ties and rolling stock are ready.

The company already has large contracts for crushed stone. Once the railroad is completed, the crushing plant will be placed, and work pressed in crushing and shipping material all winter. Meanwhile, the work of constructing the cement plant proper will proceed, contingent, of course, upon the weather.

This much may be said with reference to conditions. It is not strange, considering past experiences here, that some skepticism should exist in viewing any active operations in this ordinary stagnation of promotion. We have authority for stating that the point of uncertainty, with reference to permanency of work, has been passed. The Standard Portland Cement Co. is a living, tangible and active reality. It has sufficient money to construct and start its plant; and signed and prospective contracts that insure continuous and profitable operation. It has crude material in sight sufficient to operate its plant up to and including the 21st century, and a market for its manufactured material that, like the shadow of O'Flaherty, "never grows less."

It is confidently expected that the plant will be in full operation by June first. When in operation it will employ 150 men twelve months in the year. The company's office will continue to be in the old bank building.

The Not But Worthy View in Brief.

The SENTINEL, speaking for itself, candidly and sincerely, extends to the new Methodist pastor its welcome and its greeting.

This may seem to be outside the province of a secular newspaper, but we are constrained to speak the words in view of the past, and the part the SENTINEL has taken in the record of antipathy that has attached to the "late unpleasantness" existing between a respectable number of our people and the retiring pastor.

Probably the SENTINEL has had as much to do with this as any one person, or number of persons, inasmuch as it felt called upon to criticize certain acts and utterances of the reverend pastor in such a way as to incur his displeasure and that of many of his friends and admirers.

For this we neither grieve nor gloat, and we harbor no malice. Our quarrel was not with the chimney, but with the lamp. Sentimentally, and for whatever coolness there is between the former and ourself we are truly sorry.

The SENTINEL, during the thirty-six years of its life, has always tried to aid and encourage religious work, ordinary and extraordinary, and it always will, regardless of whatever may occur between preaching and editor in what we may consider public questions.

We therefore take this opportunity to wish the new pastor an abundant measure of success, both spiritually and temporally, and the SENTINEL asks itself in the same breath, whether editor or both, as it will any other citizen of church standing, during the religious year of the Master.

THE SITUATION AT PORT ARTHUR.

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

Chicago—Dun's review of the Chicago trade says: Too much cannot be said of the marvelous recuperative powers of the American people. Hardly ever before has a great city been so completely prostrated by the destruction of the packing houses, and yet so rapidly has it begun to return to more her business. A few months ago the idea of the packers resuming business in Chicago seemed remote, if not impossible. Now it is a fact that the packing industry is rapidly reorganizing, and that the city is to be the great center of the industry as before. Of course, the loss to the city in the destruction of the packing plants is very great, and the loss to the packers themselves is very heavy, but the business is in better shape than it was before the fire, and the prospect is that it will be more so than it was before the strike. Other lines of business are not so good as they were a few weeks ago, but there is no cause for alarm, and the general outlook is very good. Wheat has sagged from the high figures of last week, and is now at the lowest point since the first week in July. Corn is also lower, and the other cereals have followed the lead of wheat. The weather has been very favorable for the growing crops, and there will be a very large yield of corn, and a good one of wheat. Cotton is lower, and the prospect is for a very large crop. Iron and steel are quiet, but the tone is very strong, and there is every indication that the coming month will see a good deal of business in these lines. Lumber is quiet, but the tone is very strong, and there is every indication that the coming month will see a good deal of business in these lines. THEY DRAW THE LINE

DEMOCRATS MAKE THE MAIN ISSUE PLAIN.

By Declaring in Their Platform That "Protection Is Robbery!" They Declare Anew That They Are Wedded to the Doctrine of Free Trade.

The Democratic party in national convention has declared that "protection is robbery" of the many to enrich the few." The Republican party in national convention has declared its belief in and support of protection, as essential to the prosperity of the American people.

Practically all of the issues mentioned in the platforms of the great parties this year will have little consideration in this campaign except this squarely drawn line of difference between them—this elementary principle in the economic policy of the American republic. It will be useless for the leaders of the Democratic party to attempt to make its issue over alleged violations of provisions of the United States Constitution by President Roosevelt and his party, when it is a fact perfectly apparent to all thoughtful American citizens that the concessions made by the Democrats in respect to these alleged issues have no real foundation. In an attempt to get away from the overpowering influence of recent defeat in two great contest campaigns on the issue of the monetary standard, the Democratic party through its delegates, in national convention assembled, has by electing to maintain absolute silence on the subject of the money question, sought to evade that question from raising the issue to be discussed during the campaign. With so many still important problems intimately associated with the financial system such as national banks of issue, and provisions for increasing the monetary supply, it seems incredible that a party which, casts at such a half million votes in a national contest only four years ago, while declaring against the single gold standard, should so fail to deal on that question as to desire that there shall be no further discussion of it. But whether the party shall be successful in this attempt to evade an issue which its leaders forced upon the country during two national campaign contests to be at least. At this time when there is discussion of the question whether the tariff law of the United States shall be revised, and when that revision shall be made, it certainly becomes a paramount issue in the campaign when the two great parties have given opposed declarations, the Republican party for, and the Democratic party against, the principle of protection.

In its course upon the money question the Democratic party in national convention, at different times during the past fifteen years, has made declarations positive and unequivocal at certain, times, to be followed by evasion, equivocation and silence at other times. The party has heretofore declared that the principle of protection, which has been the fundamental principle underlying every tariff act since the first tariff law was signed by George Washington, is an unconstitutional principle, and directly hostile to the basic law of the republic. Its platform declaration this year the Democratic party does not say that protection is unconstitutional, but vituperatively asserts, in substance, that it would seem that a principle of government, or of taxation, that is subject to demonstration as crime, or would be applied to a criminal offense consisting of the person unlawfully taking the property of another, must not only be unconstitutional, but deserves to be uprooted from the law of the land without the slightest hesitation.

The Republican party declared in its platform at Chicago its faith in and support of protection as essential to the prosperity of the American people. The Republican party to that platform recognized the present public discussion of tariff revision to the extent of saying that changes in the tariff should be made whenever the good to be derived from such action would not be counterbalanced by the evils which might flow from the agitation incident to such change. What was more important in connection with the tariff issue of the time was the formal declaration in the Republican platform that when changes in the tariff are made the work should be intrusted to the friends of protection, not to the enemies of protection. It is the belief of undoubtedly that the experience of the American people under the revision in the tariff made by the Democratic party in 1894, which was attended by great industrial disaster—the closing of mills and factories, and the throwing of thousands of men out of employment, and causing widespread loss to American workingmen in reduction of wages, as well as in loss of employment—will furnish them in stating that when the tariff is to be revised it should not be revised by the Democratic party.

That the Republican party will read just the tariff when it is necessary, and do it upon protection lines, is demonstrated by the experience of the past.

The Republican party has never been afraid to undertake readjustments when, in its judgment, changes in the tariff schedules were necessary or desirable. The Republican party, in May, 1860, introduced what is known as the Morrill tariff bill as a purely protective measure, and it was carried six months later and signed by President Buchanan two days before the inauguration of Abraham Lincoln. As a check upon foreign importations and the outward flow of gold to pay for them, as a stimulus to home production and as a producer of revenue to defray the expenses of the War of the Rebellion, the first tariff law passed by the Republican party proved itself of incalculable benefit to the country.

The Republican party readjusted the tariff downward in 1872, and again in 1883, for the purpose of correcting some inequalities. The results of those downward readjustments were far from satisfactory.

The Republican party readjusted the tariff upward in 1890, and in spite of the fact that the Democratic party in

I pass Dr. Schlosman's gates and bring his Nevski, shivering under the occasional gleam of a street lamp, and drive on with relief each time I hear the cold and cruel Neva behind me. I have seen the Neva in summer, when the sun shines on the black rolling waters, flecked with white, and when the fashionable people are out, and I have felt the spirit of the place, and have felt the joy of life. But I have never felt the Neva in winter, when the sun is low, and the cold is bitter, and the darkness is long, without a shiver of fear. The Neva is a fitting emblem of the Russian people, and of the Russian Government—a thing of beauty, and of terrible power, which, when it is roused, is ruthless and remorseless, and which, when it is at its best, is but a thing of beauty and of power which, when it is at its worst, is but a thing of ruthless and remorseless power.

Dr. Schlosman's house is in the Nevski, and I have to drive through the Nevski to reach it. I have to pass the Kazan Cathedral, and I have to see the Czar. I have to see the Czar, and I have to see the Neva, and I have to see the Nevski, and I have to see the Kazan Cathedral, and I have to see the Czar, because I am young, and I love life, and I want to live it, and I know that I can live it, and I know that I can live it with the Neva and the Nevski and the Kazan Cathedral and the Czar in my way, and I know that I can live it with them not in my way. I know that I can live it with them not in my way, because I am young, and I love life, and I want to live it, and I know that I can live it, and BOMBARDED.

Joye's Boats Pick Out Charlevoix for a Vigorous Assault.

The most terrifying electric storm within the memory of the oldest inhabitants stirred up and mixed up things generally here from ten to eleven o'clock Saturday night.

At least four buildings in town were struck, none damaged to any great extent, but electric lights telephone and telegraph wires were put out of commission. Down at Frank Hine's drug store they were preparing to close up, when a report loud as the discharge of a rapid fire gun startled all within the building. The bolt struck the flag staff on the roof, shattering it, and shattering the splinters thickly over the pavement. Capt. P. D. Campbell and family were occupying the upper rooms. Capt. Pete says he was so startled by the shock that for the moment he thought he was on Fort Arthur, and that a twelve inch Jap shell had landed. Although no damage was done the building, a most interesting manifestation of the eccentricity of lightning was afforded. A dove of the "Bull" poked its way into the room and out again leaving no cracks, but could be convinced of apprehended on a strong bit of circumstantial evidence. A mandolin standing against the wall had two neat holes through its surface, and the strings were cut. It was the snapping of these strings that contributed to Capt. Pete's scare.

Up at Lal. Price's house the lightning came down the chimney and out again on the electric light wires in the second story, leaving only slight evidence of its invasion. Dr. Thielen's residence also receive a visit of about the same sort, with little damage.

But the most serious stroke of all was at the Western Union Telegraph office. Marshal Timmer was on patrol duty, and was standing opposite the building when simultaneous with a terrifying discharge of heaven's artillery a ball of blue fire shot from the vicinity of Williams livery barn toward the bridge. Following this he saw a light in the telegraph office. Crossing over he saw through the window that there was a blaze on the instrument table. Will Bellinger, who also saw the trouble, joined the Marshal, and the two managed to enter through a back door. A box of matches on the operating table was in a blaze, evidencing lightning's last stroke, the switch board directly above. The telephone wires were burned off, and the insulation thereon was in a blaze. Investigation showed that telegraph wires were burned out, switchboard and office cable fused and put out of commission.

The electric light and telephone people were busy all day Sunday repairing damages.

Ex-Saloonkeeper Preacher To a Preacher.

A short time since in a building church, a popular evangelist presented a sermon in which he denounced the saloonkeeper in vigorous terms. Next day in the city's most influential daily paper there appeared the following open letter to the evangelist.

"I attended your meeting last night, and I think you were, to say the least, unfair in your denunciation of the saloonkeepers. I differ with you as to their having no conscience. I am a saloonkeeper. I kept a respectable place. Besides that, I rented my place from a deacon in a Baptist church. My bondsmen were one a Methodist, the other a Presbyterian.

In the days of election Baptists, Methodists, Presbyterians, Congregationalists, Episcopalians, Lutherans, Catholics, Universalists, Infidels, atheists, saloonkeepers and hayseed soldiers all voted for a license to grant me the privilege damn souls you are trying to save; and let me tell you that now that many who arose last night to be counted a member of some church, with this fall cast their vote for liquor damnation. It is a strange fact that the evangelists are whipping the saloonkeepers with a lash that ought to be used upon the professed Christians who used their prayers to mock God and their votes to build up the kingdom of the devil. You quoted scripture last night to show that the saloonkeeper inherits the abode of the damned, but no mention was made of the final summing up of the hypocrite. A saloon keeper is not a hypocrite; a Christian man of brains who votes for a license is, and if I understand the Bible right, God hates a hypocrite more than the devil does a saint.—Ex-Saloonkeeper.—North-land Weekly.

The Michigan M. E. Conference Assign Its Pastors for the Year

The Michigan Conference of the M. E. Church, in session at Grand Rapids last week assigned its pastors. Of course local interest centres in the outgoing and incoming pastors of the Charlevoix church. Rev. A. I. Nagler, who has been pastor here for five years, goes to Ida F. Stiles Memorial church of Jackson, with the same salary as at Charlevoix.

The new pastor for Charlevoix is Rev. J. W. Vickers. Other Northern Michigan appointments are as follows:

Bellaire—W. A. Holdsson.
Boyne City—W. W. Aylesworth.
Boyne Falls—To be supplied.
Central Lake—To be supplied.
Clarion and Horton's Bay—S. W. Large.
East Jordan—R. E. Yost.
Elk Rapids—C. D. Bixley.
Harbor Springs—F. R. Wulman.
Northport—J. D. Deets.
Norwood—J. P. Durham.
Petoskey—Arba Martin.

The change at Charlevoix embraces an exchange of pulpits. Rev. Mr. Vickers coming here from the Jackson church to which Mr Nagler goes.

Presiding Elder Carroll is reappointed to the Grand Traverse District.

All His Own Way.

Congressman Darragh, who has been renominated, is the only congressional candidate in Michigan who has no opposition. So far as his election is concerned, it would make very little difference if he had.

Mr. Darragh is strong in his district, because of his effective work the past four years. The Democrats cannot find a man who is willing to sacrifice himself for the organization.

No member of Congress ever deserved better of his constituents than Mr. Darragh. He has accomplished things not by bluster, and restless agitation of extraneous "issues," but by quiet, forceful work for his district.

Mr. Darragh couldn't be beat, and that is all there is of it.

SCHOOL NOTES.

Laura Notley, Rosa O'Neill and Ethel Cook have entered the county normal class, making a total of ten members.

The girls in the basket-ball team have begun outdoor practice, baskets having been erected at the south end of the Central grounds.

The boys who ride bicycles to school from a distance will assist in the construction of a shelter for them between the Central and McKinley buildings, the Board of Education providing materials and oversight.

The High School Athletic Association, and not the Board of Education, will lease and control the grounds for athletic purposes. The Board, however, will support the boys to the fullest extent possible in making good their undertakings.

Truant officer Timmer is looking closely after school delinquents and nearly every one within the legal age is now in school or will be within a few days. It should be understood that pupils cannot be kept from school or withdrawn after entrance except for very satisfactory reasons.

28 to 0 was Charlevoix's score in the foot-ball game on Saturday, and the captain of Petoskey's team pronounced it "the cleanest game he had ever seen." That's a good deal better record than the first one last season, and we hope to keep it up. The home team plays Mancelona next Saturday, and a return game with Petoskey later.

Probably there are now more students than ever before in our high school who are taking some regular course with the expectation of graduating. This has been brought about very largely by a careful, printed description of thirteen regular courses, six of which prepare graduates to enter the university or professional schools. The student whose work is planned for a higher school will usually find a way to go to the higher school, while the one who wishes to choose a few of the easier classes, or those which are at present too hard for him, usually does not go very far. Too many pupils (and parents) seem to get their education in one or two years, but there are now in the high school only three or four who are not working in the direction of completing a regular course.

Bridge street and its unadmitted intersections would beat them all for a street fair. Charlevoix should begin now to think about a big street fair next fall—one that will make all the others look like 30 cents.

—Rev. J. W. Vickers, the pastor of the M. What is a "Machine" Man?

The word "machine" is a word which has come into use by the public press within the past few years, and is intended as a term of reproach when referring to political opponents. A "machine" man is popularly supposed to be politically corrupt and dishonest, and to use what influence he has for the material benefit of himself or his friends, and to the detriment of the public.

But we find upon investigation that any man who regularly attends caucuses and conventions, who works for the success of his party or his friends, no matter how reputable his character, let may be, is branded as a "machine" man. He may never have held a political office, or even applied to one, but has been content to zealously advocate the principles of his party or the merits of his friends for political preferment; nevertheless in the eyes of political Pharisees he has been guilty of the unpardonable offense of belonging to a "machine." Hence a man who attends to his duties as every good citizen should, is being written down as an enemy to the community.

Let us look at this matter in its true light, and consider how public sentiment is being warped and biased by the guerrilla press until a man is condemned for that for which he should be praised and honored. With the acceptance of the privileges of citizenship comes the implied performance of its duties. One of the greatest of these duties is to assist in the nomination and election of fit men to official positions. No more patriotic duty devolves upon a citizen than this, as it is the only way in which each one may register his opinion in favor of a certain line of public policy. The man who does this as a matter of duty honestly and patriotically, year after year in one line, is denounced as a "machine" politician. The fact of his strict attention to this imperative duty of good citizenship is used to discredit him. The man who [illegible] never attends a caucus because things are "cinched," will accuse those who perform their duties as citizens of doing so for personal advantage or gain. At the same time he will complacently himself on his political purity because he neglects his first and great duty as a citizen. He is too holy to mix with the politicians and sinners who attend caucuses and conventions.

There is another class of men who denounce the citizen who insists upon performing his duty as a citizen, and is not neglectful of the caucuses and polls, who are essentially dishonest. They never do anything without compensation. Knowing how corrupt and unpatriotic they are themselves, they reason all other people are the same, and that men would never take an active part in political affairs if they did not receive pay or expect personal advantage for their work. The surplusage of such men are founded upon the knowledge of their own dishonesty and venality and their inability to fathom the character of anyone. Where the general public believes to be influenced by the natural prompting of a depraved and malicious mind. Patriotism with such men is a meaningless phrase with which to gull the public, and integrity something they neither believe in nor practice.

We might to say that the man who absents himself from caucuses and then kicks on the candidates selected by his party is not a good citizen. He is usually the one who talks about the "machine," and he does this to excuse to himself his neglect of duty. Such men generally end by becoming "independents." Their principles are as fit as their party regards as a moral ulcer, and are assumed or discarded according to their condition of mind or stomach. They are only sore at one thing—that they are the only virtuous men in the party. Such men are political dyspeptics who feel their supremacy is disturbed by and better thing their associates and thus strengthening their opponents. As compared with such, give us "machine" men who convictions and principles and work for their advancement. They are better citizens and better men.

East Jordan Enterprise: Contractor Harry Tiffee was last week awarded the contract for building the new Antrim County court house at Bellaire. This is to be a fine structure with ground brick walls, stone trimings and slate roof. It will be heated with steam throughout. Antrim County and Mr. Tiffee are both to be congratulated on the decision of the building committee in awarding the contract.

Warner and Primary Reform.

So much has been said about Warner with reference to the primary reform issue, that we submit the following extract from Mr. Warner's recent Grand Rapids speech:

I believe in primary reform.

The Republican party of Michigan is pledged to primary reform, and if the degree of change from our present methods, which, as the candidate of that party, I am pledge to favor, and which the conventions of my party expressed in imperative demands, is not fully satisfactory to those who desire more radical changes, I am sure that it will not be denied that the changes are more radical and more sweeping than have ever been taken by Michigan on a question so important.

"Why do you hesitate in the matter of recommending that all our present laws relative to primaries and conventions should be repealed?" I have been asked. "Why do you risk loss of votes to yourself and your party rather than consent in full to the clamor for such a condition?"

I will tell you why, my fellow citizens. It is because through observation and information I have become convinced that such a law as is represented in the extreme demand for primary reforms—a demand so extreme that it has not even been seriously considered by either the Democratic or Republican party in scarcely another state in the Union—such a law, providing that direct voting shall be mandatory in all cases, thus making minority nominations possible, almostly thrust upon the people of Michigan, would yield no part of the good results desired. Only three of the forty five states of the Union have now in operation the revolutionary brand of primary reform which the Democratic party of Michigan is now endorsing. Those states are the Democratic states of Mississippi, Florida and Texas.

Notice to the Public.

The Boston Store has received an immense large stock of mens' suits and Overcoats, for fall and winter from the well known large firm Cohen Frank & Co. New York. The price of the suits run as high as $15.00 and the prices of the Overcoats run as high as $25.00.

In an interview with Mr. Myer Cohen proprietor of the Boston he says: "This year the trade trust we have bought of these people they manufacture every garment they put out. The cheapest suit they make is $10.00 and the cheapest Overcoat they make is $10.00. They are swellest goods I have ever seen for the money, if the people in this small dresser was a swell outfit, it certainly would pay to call at our store and inspect our line before purchasing elsewhere. Cohen Frank & Co. have had years of experience in making clothing and they certainly put these goods out in up-to-date style, they are one of the many largest concerns in the United States, and we shall continue to handle this goods because I know it will increase my business, and everybody will be satisfied in the long run.—M. WOMAN DIES AT PLAY

FATALLY AFFECTED BY GRIEFS OF HEROINE.

Mrs. Marshall Becomes So Excited in Engagement That her Heart Stops Beat—Much Damage Done by Storm Around Charlevoix.

While attending a performance of the Holding Theatre of Engagement, Ind., Mrs. Anna Marshall became so excited that she spoke from her seat to go to the rescue of the heroine of the play, who was a little stage child. At first it was thought she had fainted. Her friends, who are well known, hoped with anxiety for Mrs. Marshall's return, but when she did a carriage in her hands which had been brought home and placed in the house, it was found that she had died from heart failure. Following the tragic incident the theatre was closed for the remainder of the week. Mrs. Marshall was the wife of a prominent merchant of Engagement.

Mrs. Marshall's death was caused by the shock of the play, which was a melodrama of the Pennsylvania Archaeological Society. In spite of the tragedy, which was so suddenly ended, the play was a success. Mrs. Marshall's husband was a member of the Pennsylvania Archaeological Society. Echoes From the Skirmish Line.

It looks now as if we are to have a "mix up" in political matters in Charlevoix county in this campaign, as we are told that a call is out for an "independent" convention to nominate a county ticket.

It is too early, however, to begin a discussion of the local questions at issue, and we shall only say at this time that the Sentinel will, of course, do all in its power to secure the usual republican majorities on National, State and county tickets.

The sentiment has been in many warm battles in Charlevoix county politics, and is yet alive to fight for what it thinks is right. Life is too short however, to feed upon the poisonous elements of rancor and personal recrimination.

That some of the disturbance comes from republican sources is true, and it is to be regretted. Personal disappointment lies at the bottom of the revolt, and the propaganda is in Charlevoix township, except where, in other townships, democrats are encouraged by their Charlevoix republican allies to be active.

The republican county ticket was placed in the field by a regularly called convention, composed of regularly elected delegates from the several townships. To assert that a majority of these representative citizens were controlled by any one man act of men is preposterous.

There is no charge of incompetency or corruption charged against any republican nominee. It is only the cry of "machine" and "ring," started by disappointed candidates for office, men who, when they were in office, would be the loudest in condemnation of such action in others. It is unworthy of them, and we hope that they will yet come to a realization of the fact that there is a heresiyee.

There are other good reasons why Charlevoix township republicans should stand loyally by the ticket—reasons that will some day make themselves manifest with sledge hammer force.

If there is a fight on in this county along the lines indicated, the Sentinel will be in it up to its neck, but we shall endeavor to fight honorably, in the consciousness of right and duty.

A hollow may sometimes secure a luscious plum, but sooner or later he will eat bitter fruit.

Bryan declared that "Judge Parker is an artful dodger." Tom Watson agrees with him. These 1896 Democrats are still true to their kicks.

The "wine with alarm" prescription which the Democrats have been offering for forty years is still a drug on the market. The people refuse to take it.

The real question is, despite efforts to cloud it, how the Democrats would manage national affairs in case of their success at the polls. On that issue we have only their unsupported promise that they would do differently than in the past when their control spelled national woe.

Republican actions vs. Democratic promises.

The Democrats who urged Judge Parker to talk are now convinced that he can do as well as the average man who has nothing to say.

Summed up, the Democratic contention this year takes the form of a note of thanks that they were defeated 1896 and 1904.

Mr. Bryan has been making Parker speeches in Missouri with the express understanding that his arguments do not apply in Nebraska, where he is supporting Tom Watson's candidacy. Such is Democratic harmony.

Democratic managers are trying to make an issue of President Roosevelt's Looks and writings. The reading of them should be encouraged by all who want to encourage the growth of the spirit of true humanitarian.

The Republican party points to its record as proof that it means what it says. The Democratic party can only point its record in support of its present contention that it did not mean what it said in the past.

President Roosevelt indorses the platform adopted at the Chicago convention. Judge Parker may indorse the St. Louis platform after he gets through making amendments to it, amendments that are repugnant to the men who have been voting with him in at least two Presidential campaigns.

The attempt of some newspapers to hold Secretary of State Warner responsible for the failure of certain cities and counties in the state to return the number of Republicans they had fondly hoped were within their borders is about as cheap a bit of partisan politics as has ever been encountered. It is as cheap in fact as to be positively silly. None of the communities when were disappointed at the showing made have any sensibly acknowledged the correctness of the claims and explained the cause of the slump. None of the labors have furnished the slightest proof of the hysterical charges of the opposition that the count was not correctly made.

Here is an illustration of the difference between Fred M. Warner and Judson S. Stearns. Six years ago both were candidates for the nomination for secretary of state. Mr. Stearns won. Mr. Warner added cheerfully by the result, took off his coat, and worked as hard as ever for the success of the ticket. This year both were candidates for governor. Mr. Warner was successful. How about Mr. Stearns. Did he take off his coat and announce that he would work for the election of Warner and the state ticket? Not much! Instead he tried to get the nomination on the democratic ticket, and failing in that has announced that he will support Mr. Ferris. This action, of course, Mr. Ferris can not help, but the republicans who follow George should be sure that the difference in the two cases can not be noticeable.—Allegan Press.

Among the democratic neighbors of Hon Fred M Warner who desired to testify their esteem of him before the recent meeting of republican editors at Farmington was Clyde Merrow, a young Farmington democrat who is studying for the ministry. "I am proud to say that I am a democrat, but I am glad to be able to bear testimony to the worth of a man. The life of your candidate for governor is a splendid inspiration to every young man, especially to every young man who goes out to make his way in the world with nothing but his manhood. It shows that faithful devotion to truth and duty can succeed. I hope, gentlemen of the state press, to see good results to know Fred M. Warner as we know him. In all the tracts of character that give honor to the name of manhood. But the calumny and vituperation displayed by a section of the press we should admire if it could so secure that Michigan can have a press worthy of an intelligent and a moral people."

Tragedy Averted.

"Just in the nick of time our little boy was saved" writes W. Watkins of Pleasant City, Ohio. "Pneumonia had played sad havoc with him and a terrible cough set in besides. Doctors had tried in vain to give him relief every day. At length we tried Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, and our darling was saved. He's now sound and well." Everybody ought to know, it's the only safe cure for Coughs, Colds and all Lung disease, guaranteed by F. N. Chapel & Co. Druggist. Price 50c and $1.00. Trial bottles free.

PLATFOOTED FOR FREE TRADE

The Democratic Party Stands Committed to the Doctrine of Protection.

At the Democratic convention, the committee on resolutions of the democratic national convention used the blue pencil freely when it came to the tariff plank presented by Representative John Sharp Williams. It not only cut out of the plank the incoherent and unsounding methods, but it interpolated entire sentences that carry a distinct meaning. As revised and perfected, the plank was adopted by the convention in the following form:

"We denounce protection as a robbery of the many to enrich the few, and we favor a tariff limited to the needs of the government, economically administered and so levied as not to discriminate against any foreign state, claim or nation, to the end that the burdens of taxation shall be distributed as equitably as possible.

"We favor a revision and a gradual reduction of the tariff by the friends of the people and for the benefit of the people, and not by the friends of an alleged protection and its direct beneficiaries, keeping in view the ultimate goal of equality of burdens and the constitutional purpose of raising a revenue by taxation, and not by levying tributes to aid the agent of the Federal government in the enrichment of individuals, but in supplying the needs of the government.

"We remind the Democratic national convention assembled in Philadelphia that protection is "robbery" and that import duties must be collected only for the constitutional purpose of raising a revenue by taxation, or a tariff for revenue only.

"A tariff for revenue only spells free trade. There was a time in the history of the Democratic party when it advocated a tariff for revenue with incidental protection. The meaning of that proposition was that what ever import duties were imposed should be collected in channels that that revenue and not protection was the object sought. The Democratic party has abandoned even this form of expression of its real purpose and has now come out flatfooted in advocacy of its time-honored principle, free trade.

"Free trade, or tariff for revenue only, means the imposition of import duties for the sole purpose of raising a revenue by taxation," as the Democratic platform puts it. Since it is obsolete for reasons, the "support of the Federal government in all its integrity and vigor (sic.)" is obsolete. Its duties will manifestly be levied upon articles that are in regular and steady demand. A fixed revenue can be secured by levying duties upon staples—articles of consumption, such as tea, coffee and other commodities that are not produced in this country. Certain luxuries also are made subject to import duties under both free trade and protective tariffs, but it is a singularity that most luxuries are imported when the protective policy is in force than when the nation is burdened with worldwide competition in the profit of a free trade policy.

The issue is squarely joined, therefore between protection and free trade. There is no question of tariff revision on protective lines. There is no proposition to put trust-made goods on the free list in order that the great corporations may be deprived of the benefit of protection, while their weaker competitors in some mysterious manner are to be protected from other evils. There is no question of modification of the protective principle. The Democratic party has taken its stand upon the free trade plank, and it will not be able to evade the issue.—Milwaukee Sentinel.

Why "Gradual?"

In some quarters discussing protection is unduly furious the great strength of the Democratic platform is in the gradual "reform" of the existing protective tariff. Why gradual? Does it seem to anybody that it is to be undertaken gradually? It is as much a chief executive and elected officer of the government as ever is the Republican party. Why should it not be? Why should it not be? Why should it not be?

SCHOOL NOTES.

This is a concession from the rules of some schools which excuse no one from term examinations, regardless of class standings. But this seems an unnecessary restriction upon students whose work and attendance have been entirely satisfactory. Our plan works well and is the more satisfactory the better it is understood by parents. It is fully explained in the Students' Manual which we hope to get all parents to read through at least once each year.

In accordance with a proposition made some weeks ago to "take the public into confidence" in regard to school problems of general interest, it seems best this week to put the "school notes" into the form of an "open letter" to parents. There are at least four practical matters on which there could be a better understanding—the subject of "excuses," use of the school telephone, "leaving the room," and the course of study in the various grades.

The foregoing explanation will show why we do not wish to grant any excuses by telephone. We can not be sure excuses for future notes since the superintendent cannot grant such excuses for various grades without sending a record of it to the teachers concerned, and, broadly speaking, he has no right to receive and pass upon matters which ought to go first to grade teachers in the regular course of school business. Furthermore, the telephone is usually employed in the attempt to get a pupil excused "not tardy" when he is tardy. It sometimes seems to be expected that the superintendent or teachers will countenance this form of dishonesty and unfairness. A tardiness is a tardiness and an absence is an absence, both may be excused in the regular way, but neither can be annihilated as a matter of fact by ringing the telephone. So if it at any time necessary for your child to be absent or tardy, please get him back to school as soon as possible and fill out the blank ex-use when he brings it to you. Please do not use the telephone in connection with any excuse or complaint—write a note to the teacher in the latter case if you can not see her personally. In any event, speak to her about it before seeing the superintendent or button-holeing a member of the board. This is the only just and business-like way to settle such cases.

On the matter of "leaving the room," statistics recently taken in the school showed that over an average of nearly one-third of the pupils in each room leaving once or more in the session. In some of the rooms in which there has never been any complaint the percentage of such cases is only one in twenty; but in one room where complaint was made last year the percentage was 18.5; in other words, with an attendance of 38 pupils for the day in the room, there were fifty who thought it necessary to leave the room, 12 of them the second time. This is liberality with a vengeance. Is it possible that any parent could wish for more? This teacher certainly has the right to feel that she is being imposed upon; yet this condition has resulted, with the superintendent's consent, from allowing one pupil to go as soon as another had returned to the room—because of repeated and energetic complaints during a week or two last year. We shall certainly cut down this allowance now to something near the average, yet the average of one in three seems too large in the rooms where a recess is given each session, and also in the high school where the actual percentage for the one day was 31½. This is another matter which must necessarily be left to the teacher's judgment, with reasonable provision for cases that are really exceptionable.

In common with all good schools we require students to bring written excuses for absence and tardiness. To do less than this would expose the schools to endless irregularities and both parents and teachers to frequent misrepresentation. Your boy or girl might never tell an untruth about his attendance, but if no written explanation is required from him then we must also result the requirement concerning the one who may have no scruples. Honesty and impartiality requires that the rule shall be uniform. We provide printed blanks for these excuses, to make the requirements as light as possible upon parents. We ask them merely to certify whether the absence or tardiness was necessary, as caused by sickness or some other condition that made regular attendance impossible. Attendance at a street fair is another county is not regarded as a "necessary" absence. Some people wish it could be, but absence as excusable if it was required of boys to either parent. This again would lead to great inequality and unfairness. Some people are very scrupulous concerning the regular school attendance of their children, others keep them out or permit them to stay away for the most trivial reasons, and still others would not save them in school at all except as the law requires it. Of necessity, then, the school must in some way establish its own standard of excusable absences. In common with many other schools we do it by excusing from term examinations those who have not been absent more than three times for "necessary" reason, if their school work has also reached a certain standard. If they or their parents wish to procure an absence for other than unavoidable causes, we ask him to weigh up the reason for the absence against a half-day examination.

Petoskey Daily News: One of the most accounts fatal accidents in the city in years, happened Friday afternoon, when Harold Hamill, the 11 year old son of Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Hamill, was struck by a freight engine at the Lake street crossing and was almost instantly killed, being horribly crushed and mangled, both limbs being almost severed from the body. The accident occured about 5:30 o'clock. Mrs. Hamill, with her son, had approached the G. R. & I. tracks on Lake street and had crossed what is known as the north bound and southbound tracks, these two being the ones on the west. Here they certainly had the right to feel that the train, which was just leaving, the space between the tracks at this point is very narrow, so the Mrs. Hamill stood on the track while Harold leaned against the fence that separates the main tracks from those leading to the suburban station. As they stood in this position the shrill whistle of a freight engine, which was backing down to pick up a train below sounded its warning. The whistle continued to sound its alarm and in an instant the engine was almost upon Mrs. Hamill, who quickly dodged back from her position and escaped. Harold, however, in the excitement and probably to save his mother jumped fair in the way of the engine, was struck by the one of the tender and in an instant was passed over by the tender and three drive wheels of the engine. The usual crowd soon collected and kind friends led the grief stricken mother to the Cosman House. The engine, in charge of Engineer Mark Lawrenworth, was removed and the mangled body tenderly laid on a cot which had hastily been secured. The body was conscious and conversant with his father, who had been called. The victim was then taken to his family residence on Bay street, where all that medical aid could afford was done to save or at least prolong the faint flickering life, but, but to avail and the boy died in about twenty minutes from the time of the accident.

The ring service was used, making the ceremony the more beautiful and impressive. Shortly after the ceremony, a sumptuous dinner was served in the dining room, after which several hours were spent in a social way. The presents were numerous, beautiful and useful. At a late hour the guests took their leave, each one wishing Mr. and Mrs. Brown a long, happy, and prosperous married life. At home at South Bridge St., Charlevoix, after Oct. 1st.

Mr. Stroud and Primary Reform.

The democracy throughout Michigan is making a special effort to draw republicans into its fold by begging them in the matter of "primary reform," and putting the republican party in the attitude of opposing legislation looking to that end. They point to the defeat of the Colby bill in the last legislature as evidence of republican opposition to "reform." The republican party will make no apology for the defeat of the Colby bill, for the reason that the measure was extreme and impractical. Its defeat did not mean the defeat of the proposed reform, but its postponement until a more careful consideration of the questions could evolve a measure more fully in accord with sober common sense.

The next legislature, which meets the coming winter will be called upon to meet this question and settle it. The legislature will be republican, and one member of the lower house will be Alanso J. Stroud, of Charlevoix County.

The Sentinel yesterday interviewed Mr. Stroud on this question. Among other things he said: "I am not pledged in any case or set of men to support at defeat any measure whatever. But I am pledged, and do here pledge myself to vote for a primary reform bill in the next session of representatives. Honest, well meaning citizens do not differ as to the necessity for a revision of the franchise laws; they only differ as to the method. I stand on the platform in that and all other questions."

Mr. Stroud need not have uttered these words. He is one of the best know citizens of Charlevoix county, and his integrity of purpose, to friends and politics has never been questioned. No one who knows him will for one minute doubt that he will vote for the bill that will certainly be introduced to correct existing evils.

A. J. Stroud has lived in Charlevoix county twenty five years. And effort on the part of "guns shoot" politicians to confuse the voters of Charlevoix county that he is not a safe man to send to Lansing will fail.

He has lived in Michigan long enough to be thoroughly familiar with its political conditions, and he has certainly lived long enough in Charlevoix county to know what its people want. He is a plain, honest farmer, and one who serves the public with an earnest purpose of loyalty to their interests.

Mr. Stroud will not make the mistake of giving fire tipped words or slogans in forensic debate—he is not eloquent in debate. But he is intelligent, conservative and honest. He will be fully in accord with a majority of the people of his county on all questions, including the direct primary of a United States Senator.

In short, there is no question before the people of Michigan upon which Mr. Stroud will not vote with intelligence, honesty of purpose, and in harmony with the expressed policies of his party "darling."

Sudden Death of a Veteran.

The dead body of Thomas Hook Sr was found Sunday noon in two feet of water, inside the revetment, near the Lewis opera house.

Mr. Hook had been missing since about six o'clock Saturday night, and a search had been instituted Sunday morning. It was passing up to the street from the revetment discovered the body as above stated.

Sheriff Putnam and Justice Benton were at once notified. The body was taken from the water and a coroner's jury empanneled. It was found that there was a sharp and deep cut on the right lower part of the head, near the ear, and several other bruises.

He had evidently stalled down the stairs to the revetment and fell off. There is no rail to the stairs on the river side. At or near the water level there are several sharp cornered timbers and piles upon which he probably fell headlong, a distant of from six to ten feet.

Thos. Hook came here from Whitewater, Wis., in 1867 and was for many years employed by the late Amos Fox in the "wood scows" and about the wood yard, and may be classed as among the pioneers of Charlevoix.

He was a veteran of the civil war, having enlisted in Co "K" 52d N. Y. August 24th, 1862 and discharged July 24th, 1865. He was 68 years of age. Mr. Hook was a member of Hunter Post, G. A. R. The funeral occured Tuesday from the home of his daughter, Mrs. H. C. Cooper.

Death of James McCann Jr.

James McCann Jr., of St. James, died at St. Anthony's Hospital, Denver, last Friday morning, of tuberculosis, aged 28 years.

Mr. McCann's death is very distressing to his relatives and friends, because of the comparative suddenness of his taking off. He had always been in good health until last spring, when he was attacked by an unusual case of grippe. His recovery seemed to be slow, and it was soon discovered that his lungs were seriously affected. He was taken to Mercy Hospital at Big Rapids, but soon returned on the advice of his physician that the purer air of the island would be beneficial during the coming winter.

But the decline was still rapid, and his father determined to take him to a more favorable climate. He arrived in Denver, accompanied by his father, the young man went to Denver and entered St. Anthony's Hospital. Mr. McCann sr. returned leaving his son feeling better. Advices by wire and mail all through August and September were encouraged his relatives that there was a fair prospect of his recovery. It was not strange, then, that the telegram announcing his death was a shock.

Deceased was one of the best known young men in the entire region, and was a popular young man behind the store, having grown up in his father's extensive fishing and mercantile business at St. James. For several years past he has been in charge of the store, and the business overcame expense. He was exceptionally efficient in business, and was a most exemplary and industrious young man.

The remains arrived here Tuesday afternoon, and were taken to St James Wednesday.

Oil in paying quantities has been found on Manitoulan Island. Such is the report made by W. F. Bullock, a Chicago man, who was in the "Soo" en route to his home and who is one of a company that proposes to develop the oil fields of the island.

Arabia Lang, a young burglar, is now languishing in the bastiles at Boyne City. He claims to be an up-to-date professional crackerman. His brilliant career was brought to a wind up close at Boyne Falls, where he was arrested by Sheriff Putnam. Lang had prepared his plans and had secured assistants to help him break into L. A. Moon's store at the Falls. The scheme had leaked out and he was going to break in on Saturday night. The burglary that was going to come off was to be the first in a progressive series of robberies. His modus operandi was as follows: Saturday night at Boyne Falls, sunny night at Boyne City, Lewis St ple's cinking store the objective point. Monday night was to be devoted to the cleaning up of Albert Sturr's general store at Advance. Lang is only 20 years of age, and since he was 14 he has been under the tutelage of the most skillful burglars in the country, so he claims. He will be held for examination.

A GREAT ENTERPRISE.

The Standard Portland Cement Co.'s Charlevoix Factory to be the Best in Michigan.

The Sentinel scribe, with Supt. E. S. Stacks, on Sunday, rode over the field now occupying the energetic attention of the Standard Portland Cement Co. For about two Mr. Stacks has had a force of thirty men clearing the right of way for the 250 miles of railroad to be built from the factory site to the quarries. The clearing is done, and the work of grading, filling and culvert building is going rapidly forward.

The road will cross the Pere Marquette track near the Catholic cemetery—at that point will be made that track by a concrete tunnel, thus obviating the necessity of a regular crossing. With very trifling excentions the line is level and the grade easily made. Mr. Stacks expects to have the grade ready for the rails by November first. The rails and rolling stock will be here by December first, the crushers set up in the quarries and work begun on crushed stone contracts the coming winter.

Meanwhile, plans are being made for the big plant down at the foot of Pine Lake, and as soon as the frost is out of the ground work will begin in earnest on construction. It is hoped to have the plant in operation in July. When completed and in operation the plant will have a daily capacity of 400 tons of crushed stone, 250 barrels of lime, and 1500 barrels of cement. There are few plants of its kind in the county of greater capacity, none possessing its quantity of crude material, none where such crude material is more easily accessible, and none the crude material of which is of such superior quality. An analysis of the Charlevoix stone and shale proves it to be superior to any found in any other part of Michigan. There is an entire absence of magnesia in the stone, a feature that means much in the production of high grade cement.

The Charlevoix stone and shale proves it to be superior to any found in any other part of Michigan. There is an entire absence of magnesia in the stone, a feature that means much in the production of high grade cement.

The Company has 750 acres of lime rock on its road. Most of it is but lightly covered with soil, much of it cropping out freely. A rail road was dug on the village quary, which constitutes a part of the same stratum, and the rock extended so far down that we considered it reasonable to test its depth—the excavation having been abandoned at a depth of about twenty feet from the original surface, and yet we had not found the supply of this superior basis material is practically inexhaustible.

At Hillsworth, on the line of the Pere Marquette, the Company owns 50 acres of shale, with a stratum 75 feet in thickness. This is but about ten miles from the plant. The quality of this material is pronounced by expert chemists to be high in every essential, and the supply is practically inexhaustible in three generations of men.

All these natural conditions, to which may be added unsurpassed transportation facilities by both rail and water, both for the receipt of coal and the shipment of manufactured material, constitute the Standard Portland Cement Co's Charlevoix enterprise one of the greatest, safest and most permanent and profitable propositions in the realm of industrial venture.

We are living in the dawn of the beginning of a "cement age." The past decade has worked wonders in the utilizing of cement in construction work, and its adaptability has still greater future fields of conquest, its scope of usefulness is constantly extending, and, consequently the demand for it is constantly increasing.

Locally, it means much to Charlevoix, while certain other industries, it has the fixed character of permanence.

"Horatio H. Lewis, formerly general manager for the Jos. Langdon Iron Co., has returned from Cuba, and having formed an alliance with W. H. Whiting & Co., business men of Boyne City, will hereafter make that place his headquarters.

OLD FORT IS FOUND.

LE SUEUR'S STRONGHOLD WAS NEAR MANKATO, MINN.

State Historical Society Makes Previous Search for Location Built Four Years by Explorer in 1700. Despondent Woman Drops in Dense Forest and Dies.

Representatives of the Minnesota State Historical Society have made a successful search for the location of the fort built three years after the mouth of the Pere Marquette river in 1699 by Sieur de Le Sueur, who was sent out from the Mississippi and Minnesota rivers in search of the copper mines rather than with gold in view in the year 1700. Mr. Le Sueur's stronghold on the Le Sueur river, which empties into the Minnesota river at the city of Le Sueur, near the mouth of the Minnesota, was built by the Sioux Indians for a trading post. The fort was soon found to be in a dilapidated condition and was abandoned by Le Sueur. Every effort has been made to locate the fort since that time, but without success, until the recent discovery was made by the Minnesota Historical society.

The jury, after a long inquiry, which included the testimony of a number of women, returned a verdict to the effect that the death was caused by the deceased wearing high heels, and that the practice should be discontinued.

NAVY TO KEEP SECRETS.

It is believed that foreign governments are learning too much of the inside workings of the American navy through men picking from the pockets of the bureau chiefs the good information from which should be confidential. Change will be made this year in the preparation of the annual reports of the navy, but hitherto it has been settled that these papers will be printed, after they have decided also to omit the unbroken minutes of the business meeting.

Parker Criticises Republicans.

Alton B. Parker, in his letter accepting the Democratic nomination, for the presidency, makes a direct attack upon the Republican party on its stand in connection with the Panama canal, government expenditures, the tariff, government control of the trust, the Government, the Philippines, the Monroe doctrine, and the Chinese question. He also makes a direct appeal to the Democrats, the Independents, and the Republicans, who are dissatisfied with the present administration, and who are in favor of a return to the principles of Jefferson, Jackson, Tilden and Cleveland.

Fred M. Warner, the Republican candidate for governor, was given a splendid reception at the state fair Thursday afternoon and he delivered a rousing speech which met general approval. Mr Warner said:

I will not dwell on my excess of every kind into which I plunged after my return to St. Petersburg—that would be too long and too unpleasant a story to recapitulate.

"Surmise," I begin, "this laughter be your accusation?"

"Nay, but the mirth, the gaunt, and intent on every sign of face and gesture, denotes the fellow could not forget his sack, her wheels too time-worn, too tedious, Vladimir. He is an incubus, fellow—an incubus."

"Have the mouth, Vladimir, he is a good listener."

"Then exact not mirth, Vladimir, I pray lest I am almost certain."

"Has he dared to speak to thee?"

"Tell me—tell me what thou hast to say. If he has insulted thee in so much as a frown, I will go over, and sit alone, and take the tongue from his mouth!"

My salvation sounds are scarcely at end, I can remember, then, for I see the fool rising at his seat. And see also all eyes set on the finish. Was it right, I think?

"Nay, we saw thee taken things, my sir," says, "(Why indeed—this is none in fact. The man has always been a little in the pale going me good-day in formal and cold—I know not why, I am innocent. THE CHILD BORN.

The Independent County Convention at Boyne City Puts a Ticket in the Field.

The independent democrat sore head county convention at Boyne yesterday placed in nomination the following ticket:

Representative—R. W. Paddock, Charlevoix.
Sheriff—R. W. Beach, Boyne City.
Judge of Probate—Wm. Meaks, Boyne Falls.
Register—Jas. Isaman, South Arm.
Prob. Attorney—B. A. Jersey, Boyne City.
Treasurer—W. J. Lewis, Boyne City.
Clerk—John Bugby, Charlevoix.

Of this list, Isaman, Jersey and Lewis are democrats, the latter having been one of the leading democrats of the county for many years. Paddock, Meaks and Bugby were candidates for nomination in the regular republican convention.

But it is well known that the chief element in the "independent" movement is the disappointment of Mr. Paddock in not receiving a renomination for representative, and that gentleman has been very active in stirring up the result and bringing about the Boyne City convention.

In discussing the existing situation we must do it from political premises entirely, as nothing can be said against Mr. Paddock personally, unless he goes outside the realm of honorable effort. This we are told he has done in a certain speech recently before a grange meeting, further comment upon which, for the present, we shall pass.

But Mr. Paddock has joined the enemies of the republican party and entered the field as a candidate for representative against the regular republican candidate. Mr. Paddock's excuse is that the republican convention was controlled by a machine. Yet that convention was composed of regularly elected delegates from every township in the county. Can Mr. Paddock say the same of the "convention" that assembled here at Boyne City Tuesday? It is easy to cry "machine," but the fact remains that in the history of Charlevoix county there has never been a convention held which more fully and legitimately represented the sentiment of the party than the last republican county convention. To assert anything to the contrary is not only preposterous, but it is an insult to the republicans of Charlevoix county.

For Mr. Paddock's defeat in that convention he has only himself to blame. From the day that Mr. Paddock took the seat at Lansing he was a party unto himself. We are a believer in individual freedom of action in many phases of representative duty—the ordinary method of petition in most cases being a perversion of public sentiment, but Mr. Paddock was never in touch with the leaders of his party in Charlevoix county, and seemed to have been possessed with the hallucination that his wisdom was sufficient unto all things.

The Colby primary reform bill, which was conceived in hysteria, and for which Mr. Paddock voted, was defeated, and justly so, but from the dead ashes of its destruction has arisen another noble child to do us nothing but good, if we accept it.

Mr. Paddock tactfully acknowledged the shortcomings of this bill, although he voted for it. When asked by the writer of this why he voted for the bill he replied: "Because I knew that it would be defeated in the Senate." To our mind this is a humiliating confession.

Moreover, with his eyes wide open to the fact, Mr. Paddock misrepresented the sentiment of his party on the Senatorial question. If there is any one thing that is certain it is that a large majority of the republicans of Charlevoix county were for the reelection of J. L. Burrows to the U. S. Senate. Yet at the Norwood farmers picnic, with William Alden Smith sitting beside him on the platform, Mr. Paddock nominated the distinguished Congressman for U. S. Senator!

These are not the only reasons why Mr. Paddock was frowned upon; there are others, which it is unnecessary to enumerate here. He fell short of the mark and was shelved, and it was not done by any machine or boss, but by the people' duly elected and accredited representatives, and whoever says to the contrary permits his prejudice to run away with his judgment.

And now Mr. Paddock has left the republican party and sulks himself with its enemies. Two years ago today Mr. Paddock would have bitterly condemned such conduct in another. Then he had very much to say about the quality of his republicanism, today he is a renegade from the party that lifted him from obscurity and elevated him to the chief office in the gift of the people of Charlevoix county. Two years ago the republican county ticket was a thing of beauty and a joy forever—with his name at its head. Today it is the product of an infamous conspiracy—because his name does not ornament it.

We are sorry Mr. Paddock has taken this stand, and we are certain that he will be very sorry in November. Mr. Stroud and the entire republican county ticket will be elected, and Mr. Paddock will be out in the cheerless night of political obscurity. He will find it to be the mistake of his life.

Coal has been discovered a few miles west of the Soo and options on hundreds of acres of land have been secured by agents of capital within the past few days. Ex-Railroad Commissioner Chas. S. Osborn owns land on which coal is supposed to exist, and several people have endeavored to secure options on it.

Miss Wilson has been a resident of that place for nearly years and has been an assistant in the store and postoffice for several years where she has won many friends by her pleasant ways.

Decreasing Failures.

In the matter of recent failures there is evidence of our general prosperity, and the fact that our protecting is panic proof. The liabilities for the past six months were as follows:

January $18,183,573 April $13,136,651
February 13,812,653 May 8,817,598
March 13,796,936 June 8,809,016

The above shows an improvement every month since January. The liabilities for May and June, 1904, as compared with the same months of 1903 and 1902, were as follows: 1904, $8,817,598; 1903, $20,640,809; 1902, $13,212,751. Democratic specialists should run on the above figures and paste them in their hats for use this summer. They do well with the savings banks statistics and all other political evidence of a substantial prosperity, unaffected by the calamity wails of the business fell of a year ago last year.

Always Stand Ready to Protection.

We have had since 1872 seven different Democratic tariff policies. The party has been always at heart antagonistic to protection, but never has had, save in 1892, the courage to do anyone rightly the protective policy of the Republican party clearly and emphatically.

We may look this year for a declaration of some kind feeble to the final policy which has made America prosperous. It may be alluded to terms of compliment for the American worker. But the fabric is not to be received by enemy professions from the principle of the nation's sound tariff policy and of his own prosperity. Under Republican protective policy the average income of the American workman's family is $477.19, of which $226.50 is expended for food, the average size of the family being 4.21 persons; while the average annual income of the British workman under a free trade tariff is $320, of which less than $5 per cent goes for food.

Let the d. n. p. reserve and "save with alarm" as it may at St. Louis in 1904, the American masses will vote for a continuance of the policy which has made this country the most prosperous spot upon the face of earth.—Louisville Herald.

State Land Commissioner Wilder has received a letter from a man in the northern part of the state, who writes that he is about to establish a plant for the manufacture of turpentine, tar, etc., from norway pine stumps, and suggesting that as state lands are covered with stumps of pine trees he would like to make an arrangement with the state to use the stumps. Land commissioner Wilder has authority under a law passed by the last legislature to sell timber on state lands when it is advantageous to the state and some arrangement will probably be made by which the state will realize something from the old pine stumps and a new industry in Michigan established. There is a strong demand for state lands that promises well for northern Michigan. Land Commissioner Wilder is almost daily in receipt of letters inquiring prices of land and dates of sales.

We feel sure that those who heard her then will be only too glad to have the privilege of being entertained by her again. The W. C. T. Fessenden, postmaster and merchant, was opened and rifled of its contents, about seventy-five dollars, divided between funds for the government and private funds. Mr. Fessenden's building was entered by the robbers, the safe carried out and placed on an Ann Arbor railway truck, then conveyed to Donald E. McIntyre's farm, a few rods away, and thrown open. Mr. Fessenden heard the report of the explosion, suggesting a burglary, but she did not awaken her husband, being fearful of the results should he follow the robbery. (Mr. and Mrs. Fessenden are well known here, the latter being a daughter of Wm. Cooper, of Marion.)

—Wednesday evening, October 5th, at the home of the bride's parents, near Atwood, occurred the marriage of Miss Grace Greenman and Mr. Eugene Hutchins. Only relatives of the contracting parties were present, the groom's mother and sister from Petoskey being among the number. After the congratulations and good wishes were spoken, a bountiful supper was served. Mr. and Mrs. Hutchins went at once to Torch Lake, where they will reside for a time.

A BUSINESS MATTER.

A Practical Proposition That Appeals to the Common Sense of Every Voter.

Aside from the importance of every competition in Charlevoix county voting for A. J. Stroud for representative, viewing it, as it should be viewed, in connection with National issues, a vote for county officers is a business proposition to every citizen of the county. In considering the matter he should dispassion his mind of any prejudice that is the outgrowth of local controversy.

Therefore, let us reason together with reference to the proposition. With two exceptions, the republican candidates for court house offices, are present incumbents. Not one of these men have been charged with incompetency, neglect of duty or corruption. On the contrary, every one of them has been faithful and exceptionally competent. The two new men on the ticket—D. S. Dayton and E. W. Coulter are probably as well known as any of the others. Mr. Dayton has for many years been one of the most capable and industrious members of the board of supervisors. There is not a man in Charlevoix county better fitted for the office of county treasurer that Mr. Dayton, and certainly none more deserving.

We deem a review of the personnel of the ticket of very little importance. The voters care very little where they were born, where and how long they went to school, how they look in a photograph, or what church they attend. They are all men who are well known, and of established reputation for ability and integrity.

J. M. Harris, the nominee for Judge of Probate, has filled the office for two terms. He has an established reputation as one of the brightest lawyers in Northern Michigan. It is generally conceded that this office should be filled by a lawyer. A judge of probate, in the settlement of estates is thrown against questions of law, upon which only a lawyer can promptly and safely decide. A large majority of probate judges in Michigan are lawyers. It requires no argument to establish the truth of the proposition that the office is semi-judicial, and that a judge well versed in the law is a safer adjudicator of probate matters than a man who is not. Mr. Harris stands high as a probate judge. He has made no mistakes, and has been vigilant and faithful. Therefore, a vote for judge of probate is emphatically a business proposition. It means a vote for efficiency against a experimente alternative, to say the least.

No more popular nomination for a county office was ever made than that of Elmer W. Coulter for sheriff. Charlevoix is not a man in Charlevoix county who is better known among the farmers than he, and there is not a man in the county for whom they have greater respect. For many years as the superintendent of the D. M. Ferry Co. here, he was thrown into business relations with the farmers, and we have never yet heard one of them speak an ill word of him. His straight forwardness and rectitude are as well known throughout the county as are the waters of Pine Lake. He has never in his life held a public office that carried with it the costs of remuneration, and the only office he ever held were Village trustee, and village president, which latter position he now fills for the second term. The man who says Elmer W. Coulter is a "machine" candidate, reckons wrongly; yet the same alleged "machine" that nominated him nominated the balance of the ticket. It was the people's properly and legally constituted machine that did the business. Mr. Coulter will bring to the office of sheriff a high degree of ability, judgment and integrity.

W. J. Pearson, the nominee for register of deeds, is charged with being the head of the "machine" that controlled the county convention. Did you ever think of this fact? A bad man cannot control or direct public sentiment in Charlevoix county. A dishonest political schemer cannot run conventions in Northern Michigan. Unquestionably there are localities where ignorance and cupidity prevail, to which "bosses" can pipe their vocation—but it is not in this neck of the woods. There are always people who envy their neighbor's thrift. If, by keen business foresight and industry that neighbor reaches a more or less commanding position in the industrial or business world, there are always those who cry out against him. W. J. Pearson is one of the sterling business men of two ends of the county, and he came up from a common lumber camp laborer. In no portion of the county is he held in higher regard than in the east, where he lived for many years. No man has ever yet charged him with being unmanageable in a business deal, and very many are the benevolent acts that he has to his credit when the truly benevolent part of his nature was appealed to. It is the kindly and upright element in his nature that have brought him friends, and with friends come influence. Pearson has friends and influence, hence he is a "machine" politician and a "boss." Let these kickers produce one man, in convention or out of it, whose vote has been influenced by W. J. Pearson by coercion, falsehood, or any other improper or corrupt method, to forever after hold their peace. Mr. Pearson is republican in every fibre of his being, and is chairman of the republican county committee. These facts are also probable evidences of his "machine" propensity. Mr. Pearson is the kind of a republican that, had he been defeated in the recent convention, his cost would now be off and he would be found in the thick of the fight for the ticket.

The office of county clerk probably more closely than any other, is linked with vital public interests. The county clerk, is clerk of the court, register in chancery, and clerk of the board of supervisors. In these several capacities the clerk can only be efficient by thoroughly familiarizing himself with official form and routine. This requires, first, aptitude, and, second, experience. With aptitude experience gives efficiency. Darwin F. Meech has filled the office of county clerk for four years. There is no office that is so completely under official scrutiny as that of county clerk. His work is reviewed by the board of supervisors more than that of any officer because he is more closely in touch with that body. As clerk of the circuit court his work is always under the eye of the judge, and with both board and judge Darwin F. Meech stands high for accuracy and intelligence. He has a personal and official record stand without a smirch or a shadow. This then, is emphatically a business proposition. Weigh it well. It has close to your interests as a citizen and a tax payer.

That Charlevoix county has had A. B. Nicholas for prosecutor the past four years, is cause for congratulation, because no public prosecutor was ever more conscientious and industrious in guarding public peace and safety. First of all, Mr. Nicholas brought with him when he came to the circuit bar high attainments as a scholar. Upon this sure foundation he rapidly built up a fabric of outstanding legal strength, and today he ranks among the ablest of Northern Michigan lawyers. To the duties of public prosecutor he has brought the same ability and zeal that he exerts for his client, be he rich or poor. His work the past four years has been that of an able, faithful and honest public servant. Weigh this proposition in the scales with the Boyne City tourn proposition, and tell us if it is not a business proposition of importance.

Mr. Fitch's administration of the office of circuit court commissioner has been entirely satisfactory to court and bar. He is renominated, and entitled to the vote of every republican, as is also Mr. Hubbard, for county surveyor. Mr. Hubbard is the present surveyor, and is a worthy successor of his father, who for more than twenty years filled that office.

Now, purely as a business matter, look over the Boyne City fusion ticket. Be sure of the name on that ticket do you know, and how many of them are known outside the township in which they live? If there is one or more of them you do know, can you vote for him or them against the corresponding name on the republican ticket? We think we are justified in edging up closer to the mark in just one phase of this business proposition. Can you conscientiously vote for William Meaks for Judge of Probate against J. M. Harris?

As a business proposition, would you be willing to entrust the affairs of Charlevoix county in the hands of the men that were nominated by the Boyne City convention?

If you want a good smoke buy a "Hunch" nickle cigar.

BURNED TO THE GROUND.

The Big D. M. Ferry Seed Co. Warehouse Destroyed by Fire

The large seed warehouse of D. M. Ferry & Co. located at the foot of Pine Lake in this township, was totally destroyed by fire, together with all its contents, last Thursday night, with eleven o'clock.

A man passing the warehouse saw evidences of fire inside the building. Others soon discovered the blaze, and investigation showed that the inside was ablaze on the west side, near the center of the building. The door into the office, at the south end was forced in, and, although the office was full of smoke, there was no fire, effectually disposing of the theory that the fire caught from the stove.

A telephone alarm was sent in to the village, and both hose companies responded, but as the village water main near enough to reach the building with the hose, the Silsby was hurried to the spot, and soon had two streams directed against the fire.

But the flames had too great a start to subdue, and the big building was soon destroyed. Stored in the building were 20,000 bushels of seed peas, valued at fully $25,000. The building, with its machinery was valued at $15,000. Both building and stock are understood to have been partially insured.

Only about three quarters of the pea crop was in, and the company was preparing to soon open the season, of "picking," which lasts through the winter, and employs about fifty women and girls. Last winter the company paid out nearly $4,000 in wages.

The Ferry warehouse was built in 1892, at about two-thirds its size when burned. Soon after building it, the company sustained a serious loss by its collapse while full of peas, the cause being defective foundation. It was rebuilt a few years ago, to meet the demand of greatly increased business, the building was lengthened, adding one third, or more to its capacity. It was one of the Company's best country warehouses, and was supplied with the best and most modern appliances for handling their stock, which amounts to 30,000 bushels of peas per year.

The plant of the company have not made known what their loss is very little doubt that they will rebuild next summer. The location in the center of the best territory tributary to the Pine Lake and Lake Michigan, and the acreage of contracts has steadily increased from the day that they built their Charlevoix warehouse. Not the least important section covered by them lies beyond Beaver Island, from which he'come a quality of stock unsurpassed by that of any other locality. Present and prospective lumbering operations there involve the clearing up of many hundreds of acres of fine clean, agricultural land—already there are evidences that these lands will be colonized by a class of thrifty farmers.

The Ferry Co. will certainly not relinquish territory that is so desirable, and which possesses so great future possibilities. Therefore it may be put down as certain that the warehouse will be rebuilt, and probably larger than ever.

Engineer Who Fell Asleep After Being on Duty Twenty-two Hours Convicted of Manslaughter—Little Joe Bills Slaty to Chicago.

At Jackson, in Northern Ohio, John E. Dingman, a national engineer, charged with killing two men in a collision last April, in which two cars of the Toledo, Canton and Akron, Judge Sharer, was convicted that engineers have a right to assist on a level and assess as many hours' labor for a day's work. The jury was out about an hour, when it returned with a verdict of manslaughter against the defendant. The action was brought by the widows of the victims, Fireman Hoover and Brakeman Hoover, who were killed in a collision in Canton, Ohio, April 1, 1900. The defendant was a veteran engineer, and was on his twenty-second hour of duty when the collision occurred. The accident was caused by his failure to obey a signal, and he was asleep when he should have been on the lookout for the signal

Why it Would be Dangerous.

"By the machine we mean those now in control of state affairs, who do not hesitate to say they believe it would be dangerous to allow the people to make the state nominations by direct vote. Dangerous for whom? Guess."—Leading Ferris Organ.

All right. First guess: It would be dangerous for any man, who has not a very large bank account. The unbroken testimony from all places where the method had been tried is that the expense to candidates is heavy. The Muskegon Morning News says candidates for nomination to county offices at the recent primary election they found it necessary to spend from $250.00 to $1,000.00 each for publicity in the competition for votes. A similar experience attended the primary election for Kent county, and the Detroit papers have commented upon the costly character of the canvass for candidates in Wayne county; and these are in county canvasses only, instead of being spread over a great state. A report from Florida tells of the burdens there, where ward heelers and blackmailers as well as the newspapers camp on the trail of the candidates to such an extent that the cost of nomination since records the value of the office, and it is often impossible to get worthy people so enter the race for that reason. Minnesota makes much the same report. So, it would be not only dangerous for a poor man to enter a state canvass of that kind, but impossible for him to do so with any hope of success.

Another guess. It would be dangerous for the aspirant to office who would be unwilling as a matter of principle, to enter upon a money contest for a nomination—a contest where the most liberal expenditure would promise the most favorable results. Such a man would find himself compelled the sacrifice either his principles or his prospects.

Another guess. It would be dangerous to the American principle that the majority shall govern. If in Kent county there could be nine candidates for one office, and one of them be nominated against the choice of nine thousand voters in pool of twelve thousand, there might easily be in the state of Michigan a score of candidates for one office, and one of them be nominated against the wish of four-fifths of the three hundred thousand votes in our party.

And to sum it up in one guess, it would be dangerous to the welfare of the state and the security of her valuable institutions, when it disposes age her worthiest citizens from seeking places of high trust and responsibility, and tends to treat the competition for such places to those of ability and disposition to make large money investments in it, and to make it possible for them to win against the objections of large majorities of the people.

"Protection is a robbery," says the Democratic platform and Judge Parker proposed to compound a felony by "gradually reducing" a robbery.

What About This?

The people who, with democratic assistance, have brought about the conditions that culminated in the recent Boyne City "convention," have worked their propaganda on the basis of "primary reform," so called.

It would naturally seem to a citizen who honestly desires to mix a moderate degree of consistency with his politics, that the first duty of these philanthropic reformers should be to practice what they preach. The burden of their song is that nominations should be "direct," that the choice of candidates should come from the people, untainted by the machinations of any ring or coterie of politicians.

Did the Boyne City convention have this our populist character? Were these "delegates" elected by a regularly called caucus, in any township in the county? If so, was any such caucus thrown open to the light of day?

There were 41 votes cast in the Boyne City convention, and not one of them came from his respective township with credentials from any legally called caucus. These people cry out against machine politics, and yet, the Boyne City convention was as much the work of a machine as any Tammany Caucus ever held in New York. It had not the first element of popular expression as that term is interpreted in politics.

As a matter of fact, the Boyne City convention was called as a purely democratic convention, by W. J. Lewis, chairman of the democratic county committee. Mr. Lewis was an aspirant for the legislative nomination. But, on a certain date, the present nominee for representative, in company with Mr. Lewis' predecessor, as chairman, drove to Boyne City. A conference was held, and the result was an amalgamation of all the discordant elements of anti-republicanism. Mr. Lewis stepped aside, Mr. Paddock, and the former accepted a place lower down on the ticket. What did the people outside of this "reform" syndicate, have to do with the transaction?

The political elements constituting this gathering were democrats, socialists and former republicans, and not one of them can trace his representative authority to a source that tallies with their loudly professed doctrine of "primary reform"—indeed, the whole transaction is directly contrary to, and in direct violation of the principle upon which is built the present "primary reform" campaign.

Moreover, viewing the ticket from a purely political standpoint, why any citizen claiming to be a republican vote it, is just as unreasonable. Of the clerk, officers, treasurer, Lewis and Jersey are democrats. Paddock and Mr. Hughes are "turn-downs" of the republican convention. Of Mr. Moore Mr. Paddock has said as many uncomplimentary things as has ever been uttered against the ex-senator. The ticket is three-fifths democratic in all myriad offices. We may pre-suppose that the representative nominated on that ticket will receive the solid democratic vote. In all reason he should. If elected to which party is he most obligated? With he, at any time between one election and another claim his intention to vote for J. C. Burrows for U. S. Senator? Or will he declare his intention to vote for a republican for that office? In other words, will he declare to the people of Charlevoix county that he will or all things act with the republicans in the house of representatives? Owing to the peculiar position in which he is placed he will not so declare.

Therefore, who should any republican, who desires to see President Roosevelt supported by a republican senate, vote the Boyne City ticket?

A Gross Insult

If Mr. Warner should choose to read any of his paid writings in the state machine press, he might be convinced that he really stands for primary reform.—Detroit Tribune.

In these words the Tribune offers a gross insult to scores of papers in Michigan that are supporting Hon. Fred M. Warner. There may be papers that are paid therefor, but better authority than Mr. Scripps, newspapers would be necessary to convince anyone of it. Nonsense does not shape the political course of the republican press of Michigan. It is doubtful if Mr. Warner can be said of the Scripps sheets. If the time ever comes when the newspapers of Michigan, either republican or democratic, sink to the level of the News and Tribune style of journalism, the state will most deserve pity.—State Republican.

Ever fear of the democratic candidate for governor asking for support on account of his party's recent? Have you heard him reminding the gentleman from Ionia who leads the National ticket? Have you heard the big Rapids school master, who was a red hot Bryanite in 1900 and in 1896, still cling to the time-worn argument to three two a morable campaign?

There was no necessity for a postscript to President Roosevelt's letter of acceptance.

Tom Taggart is not dealing in the Democratic game any more. He has been sent into a corner to amuse himself playing solitaire.

Ex-President Cleveland is to be forced into the campaign to make an address. The party's candidate has dodged all the great issues.

Democrats always have a majority in September, but like other Democratic things, they do not last long enough to be of service.

There has been no quarrel among Democrats for the privilege of answering the questions to the party propounded in President Roosevelt's letter.

Democrats who delighted in declaring that President Roosevelt had been muzzled wished that he had been alive they read his letter of acceptance.

Democrats who have been shouting the President as "the man on horseback" now wish he would ride all too fast instead of stopping to write letters of acceptance.

Chairman Taggart insists that he sees Democratic victory ahead. Taggart is afflicted, evidently, with the same style of political blindness which James K. Jones used to display.

Republicans will welcome the Democratic decision to make the tariff an issue. Republicans fear no argument against a policy which has made the nation the most prosperous in the world.

Merchants and manufacturers state that the fall business promises to be a record breaker. Such conditions would not exist if democratic success were deemed possible by the business interests of the nation.

A party or candidate fit to govern must have the convictions and the courage maintain them. Mr. Ferris says he don't care for national issues, but is loyal to both Democrats and Republicans.

H. L. Wood was supervisor for years by the grace of republican votes and was next to the legislature three times from this county. He aspires to other political honors. Was turned down by the convention system, moved to Oakland county, and is now a rampant primary reformer. As a rule Henry dies high, and if he goes into this new party we advise the managers to see that all the traps some are cocked.—St. Louis Independent.

It is understood in Detroit that James E. Scripps, the millionaire owner of the Scripps newspaper combination of Detroit, Grand Rapids and Bay City, intends to contest with Dan J. Campau, the millionaire boss of the state Democracy, for Senator Burrows' seat in the United States senate if the governorship and the and the legislature are carried by the "bipartisan" democratic campaign, which he is predicting. This is declared to account for the extreme activity of his four newspapers against the Republican state and legislative ticket.

"Under ordinary circumstances," paid Mr. Ferris in his speech at Howard, the other day, "I would not have accepted the nomination of my party for governor but when I consider how the people have been abused, I feel that to refuse the call would be to refuse to do my duty as a citizen." Mr. Ferris always feels that way. The call has come to him several times, and his sense of duty always compels him to accept. He has too usually been required to give his services to the people after the election, and so the duty has not been burdensome to him; and then the Ferris School has profited by the campaign advertising, which is a good thing, and thus both Mr. Ferris and the people have been benefited.

The expense of taking the state census ten years ago was $60,000. That was paid out of the state treasury as the rest of the work under the old law, with enumerators appointed by local authorities. The expense of the present census will be approximately $400,000, which is less than half of the amount appropriated for it by the legislature. Thus, under the new census law, which has been attacked by the democrats in this campaign, and under the administration of it by Secretary of State Warner, who is also attacked in the same connection, more than $400,000 has been saved to the state from the cost of the last census, and more than $600,000 is saved out of the money appropriated for the present census. This is effected through republican legislation and republican administration, and through Fred M. Warner's personal administration and the facts as not allowed support for the reckless accusations, both general and malignant, of extravagance and corruption so freely made against republican officials by Mr. Ferris and his backers.

A startling in ident is narrated by John Oliver of Fulton, Pa., as follows: "I was in an awful condition. My skin was almost yellow, eyes sunken, tongue coated, pain continual in my back and sides, no appetite, growing weaker day by day. Then physicians had given me up. Then I was advised to use Electric Bitters. In my great joy, the first bottle made a marked improvement. I continued their use for three weeks, and am now a well man. A Story of Russian Power

By MARIUS EASTLAKE

CHAPTER IX.

The aspect of this concrete box changed so much that one from Astor House could easily mistake nearly a month into. And I, too, my friends, I hope, have lost my frame has hardened and strengthened, and, still, in no more has one and courage that and fortune came and staying. Now I go to Manzella's hotel as I go home, as that one is at home and while I am injured with hope and confidence and have a personal as possessing more with and more and more and more of men living and coming with a ready smile and a word.

And now I am actually in the government of Kursan, and I can see near the frontier, and my first difficulty is staring me in the face. I cannot hope to get by guards every time. I have occasion to take the Marozeka, I will make a pass for a freight model, and, candidly, philosophically I have thought of it.

"When the time comes I will find a way."

It last come. The implicit of the sun before me, and I felt as if I was emerged on the forty years my own language, I have studied Russian as far as possible, but it is not as I have hoped. Living and talking in Russian, I am, in my mind, a Russian. The manner has not been affected by the Russian twelve years from I what disorder to be possessed.

"I can and everything around me to a where and I am the Russian. I am the beginning, every position that start at a steady step, and I am the Russian. I wonder for it should, the determinable person I am the Russian. I am the Russian when a long and upset stretch of the Russian. I am the Russian when the sparkle lower and repeatedly.

Hello, Vasili Gregorovitch! Again, as always, come from the game?"

I was startled, for I was so absorbed in my thoughts that I had forgotten my surroundings. He had I had gone out of the hotel, and I was quietly walking up and down with the Hotel Manzella, and Charlevoix Sentinel.

WILLARD A. SMITH, Editor.

Will Mr. Paddock Answer?

When the republican county convention was held, the State republican convention had already occurred and had given to the people a platform. One plank of that platform,—and, we may say a leading plank—committed the party to the passage of a local option primary election law.

In the county convention Mr. Paddock was a candidate for renomination as representative as a republican, and hence, with all that is implied in such candidacy—the endorsement of the platform. He could not have hoped for the favor of that body had he not been willing to declare himself in accord with the platform. Would he not have so declared himself, if called up to do so? He certainly would.

Had he been nominated in the county convention he would have been minutely questioned upon the ticket for primary reform as pledged by the party in the State convention, and he knows it.

But the convention nominated Mr. Stroud, and Mr. Paddock went out of the hall an enemy of the republican party, and the first man he met was the man who was waiting for him for the expected exigency—the ex-chairman of the democratic county committee. The two gentlemen met, undoubtedly by pre-arrangement, conditioned upon Mr. Paddock's defeat, and at that time began the movement for amalgamation.

Mr. Crouser is too good a democrat not to grasp the opportunity thus offered to divide republicans in a matter that affects national issues, and Mr. Paddock was a willing instrument. This is the situation in a nut shell.

Suspended Publication.

The Harbor Spring Republican, established about twenty-one years ago by L. A. Clark, and lately bought by a carpet-bagger named Lamereaux has suspended publication because of a lack of support.

During the ownership of the paper by Mr. Clark it was always a stalwart in its republicanism. Mr. Clark was not the smallest man in Northern Michigan, by any means, but he was always consistently republican, although he was consistently honest. According to his light, Mr. Clark was a good citizen, and an unswerving republican. Moreover, he always made a good living out of the paper, and laid up a little for a rainy day.

But there came a new prophet in Israel. Mr. Lamereaux, a man with considerable more "book larnin" than Mr. Clark, bought the paper, and rolled up his sleeves for a "campaign of education." Although halting from other causes, he discovered that the republican party in Michigan had become corrupt—in fact, rotten. The republicans of Emmet county should no longer be compelled to move at the crack of the "machine" whip! Michigan must be redeemed from ring rule! Warner was only a puppet in the hands of an unscrupulous coterie of Tom Navins and his kin! The recent State convention was false to the traditions of Lincoln republicanism! Mr. Ferris represented all that was high minded, pure and patriotic in politics!

In brief, Mr. Lamereaux, with the aid of Texas or Central America sun on his brogans, had come among us as a Messiah, with the inspiration of a prophet, commissioned to reveal unto the benighted of Northern Michigan in general, and Emmet county in particular, the true gospel of clean politics. He dipped his pen in vitriol, and went after the "Machine" as a bull terrier goes after a lobsaloo cat!

And now "Orthodox" occupation is gone! His ad. account at the grocery is banished, the bread can is low, the supply dribbling procurable reminds the editor that the sinners of Northern Michigan are not the thoughts of Texas. Two months, perhaps, or three, did not fall over each other to subscribe for the Republican. Oh, well, "no man lives in vain!"

The Republican has turned up its toes and lies buried in the graveyard of mistaken philanthropy. It was worthy of a better fate than death from genital enlargement. For the sake of old times and old associations, we mourn its decease.

Let the inscription upon its tombstone be, "It died of an acute attack of mugwumpery."

SCHOOL NOTES.

There are at least three good reasons why the High School Lecture Course this year is the best in Northern Michigan. First, it is rightly proportioned in variety—a male quartette, two lectures, one impersonator, the Kaffir Boys Choir, and one cartoonist. Second, its numbers come on the right week days Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, and only one on Thursday evening—with one number each month from Nov. 15 to March 22, except Feb. which has two. Third, it is better than the course in Cadillac or Traverse City by the addition of the Kaffir Boys whom we missed last year, though the season tickets in those towns probably cost considerably more.

As our High School room seats less than three hundred, in order to support this course we are obliged to make the season tickets a little more expensive than last year, though the average cost per number is practically the same. The course is conducted in behalf of the school with the special assistance of the Senior class whose legitimate expenses for commencement are paid out of the proceeds, if there is any surplus above costs. These expenses are limited to programs, decorations, piano-drayage and tuning, rental of church, etc, and do not include class pins or any other personal expenses. Any surplus beyond the sum received for these purposes will be devoted to improving the library and other equipment of the schools. By the terms of his contract with the Lecture Bureau, Superintendent Howe would become personally responsible for any deficit in the course.

With these facts clearly understated, we believe the good people of Charlevoix will abundantly sustain the course offered this year. The first number is the celebrated Whitney Brothers Quartet. One of them is a fine reader and could furnish an acceptable entertainment by himself. They are real brothers in the same family and are endorsed as among the best singers on the platform.

Dr. Samuel Gray lectures on "Three I's in a Fool." Though young, he is a fascinating talker with a personal tone that cannot fail to elevate. James Francis O'Donnell successfully impersonates the eighteen characters in Wilson Barrett's great drama "The Sign of the Cross," a realistic chapter in the lives of the early Christians. That's enough to say about him. Frank Dixon is a "master of the art of oratory." The son of a preacher, and the brother of two others who are world famous, he comes by his talent naturally. His subjects are—"The Threat of Socialism," "The Coming American," "The Moonback," and the "Imperial Democracy." He undoubtedly surpasses any former lecturer in the Charlevoix courses.

It is unnecessary to describe the Kaffir Boys Choir. Our disappointment last year on account of a railroad accident, prepares us for a double appreciation of them this time. The course closes with J. Franklin Caveny, the "Young Frank Beard."

Caveny is a witty and artistic genius.

He makes birds fly;
He makes chairs fly;
He makes his tongue fly;
And so the people laugh and wonder at these different flies.

We take J. Franklin Caveny, if better you would have any.

A pair of red lumbering wheels, twelve feet in diameter were shipped to the Beaver island Lumber Co. They were too big to go in the gangways, and they were lashed to the sides of the boat amidships, giving the boat, to a distant observer the appearance of a side-wheeler.

—The Lyre, Michigan's humorous magazine, published for the last six years at Petoskey, has been removed to Traverse City, where it will be issued under a new management and under a slightly changed name. John G. Wright, the editor and owner of the publication, has been joined by Wilber D. Campbell, proprietor of the Northport Leader, and the magazine will hereafter be known as the Liar. The object of the Liar will be to lie. It will not, however, occupy the same field of endeavor as the East Jordan Enterprise, but will lie harmlessly, and strictly within the the realm of humor.

From Under the Grass.

The SENTINEL has long since ceased to be irritated by any strictures that emanated from the pen of the editor of the East Jordan Enterprise. That paper long ago fell from the "third estate" to the bone-yard of intellectual classification, and its editor is little better than an object of ridicule in Charlevoix county.

But it is better than nothing as an organ for the mugwumps, and they have taken it over as their only mouthpiece.

They are welcome to it.

In its last issue are two communications signed "X," devoted to the abuse of the editor of this paper. Both bear, unmistakably, Charlevoix ear-marks, and they just as surely disclose the identity of a coward and a knave.

We do not think anyone has any doubt of the authorship of anything that appears in the editorial or local columns of the SENTINEL. The editor of this paper always writes what he means, and means just what he says. He therefore will be responsible for what he says at all times.

But a dirty coward may cast slurs, throw out insendoes, and indirectly reflect on the character of others, and cover it up by "X," or some other screen of obscurity. Such an one only deserves the contempt of all decent men, who believe in fighting in the open, face to face, helm to helm. Such an one can only be likened to the venomous reptile, who strikes from under the grass.

The editor of this paper has lived in Charlevoix about as long as "X" has lived on the earth, and he is willing to have his record as a man and a citizen printed in the East Jordan Enterprise, or any other paper, holding nothing back. The slurs fall harmless. We are not ashamed of the record, written or unwritten, political or personal. We are not afraid to look any man or woman in the face, and we are certainly not afraid to look "X" in the face and brand him as a poltroon and a coward, unworthy to associate with manly, courageous, honorable men.

It is indeed fortunate that this contemptible sneak has an organ low enough in the scale of journalistic depravity to correspond with his character.

During the past year the state land commissioner disposed of 100,000 acres of state lands, and the receipts of the office from sales, interest and penalties amounted to $251,931. The steps taken by the present land commissioner and auditor general, under Republican legislation, for the opening of large bodies of desirable farming lands for settlement and purchase at low prices has enabled many a family of little means to obtain a home and at the same time has settled up much of the so-called barren northern land. The result of energetic interest on the part of these officials has brought about a settlement of many new farms in the northern counties and added a multitude of thrifty yeomanry to the citizenship of our state.

Burrough for Congressman.

It is a peculiar position that Congressman Darragh occupies in this campaign. He is nominated to represent the 11th district, he finds himself without a regularly nominated opposing candidate.

Although the position must seem a very lonesome one, in the midst of an otherwise strenuous campaign, it is a great compliment to Mr. Darragh—one that none of his predecessors ever received.

His election being so certain that nothing but death can prevent it, we have, to some extent lost sight of this able and worthy man, in the heat of controversy.

But A. H. Darragh's running for congress, and is, as he always has been, as deeply interested in republican success everywhere as he is in his own success.

No man ever deserved better of his constituents than does A. S. Darragh; no man ever sent to congress from Michigan did more to earn re-election than he, and no man ever did better with so little flourish of trumpets or beating of drums.

Mr. Darragh has not only displayed rare qualities of industry in his work, but he has proven himself a skillful and upon close occasions, a brilliant democratic votes will be cast for him in the neck of the woods.

Charlevoix county will not lag behind of Hosmer'ell, and that is saying a good deal. Charlevoix county will give him from 1,000 to 1,200 majority.

A Word to Republicans.

The election of Alston J. Stroud as representative is so certain that election day comes on November 8th. An investigation by any reasonably fair minded man will surely convince him of this fact.

This being true, will it not be very unwise for Charlevoix township to record a majority against him under existing conditions? Charlevoix township is overwhelming republican in sentiment. It will give an overwhelming majority for Roosevelt and the principles he represents. Will it, at the same time record a majority against the republican candidate for representative? Will it vote to weaken the strength of republicans on legislative joint ballot, in a sensational year?

Locality applied, will it, in common with other western townships, be guilty of allowing democratic politicians to knife a republican candidate from the east? There is food for thought in this proposition. Reflect!

A. J. Stroud is a safe, conservative and honest man, and there is no good reason why he should not receive every republican vote in the county.

Look Out For Lies!

Look out for campaign lies from now on. A good big one is in circulation that public interests demand should not be disseminated. It is because of this fact that the opposition is, in the dark, circulating a most ridiculous lie.

Before you give credence to campaign yarns investigate, and if just before election are a favorite democratic resort.

Look out for them!

If you want a good cheap buy a "Hunch" nickle cigar.

Who Stearns Was Turned Down.

The correspondent of the Detroit Tribune, accompanying the democratic candidate for governor in his tour of the state, showed him at Monroe the questions propounded to him by Congressman Townsend at Ionia. Here is question 6, and Mr. Ferris' answer:

6. Q. "The principal candidates before the republican state convention were Fred M. Warner and Justus S. Stearns. The prominent candidates before the democratic state convention were Woodbridge N. Ferris and Justus S. Stearns. If you, Mr. Ferris, contests the republican state convention for turning down Justus S. Stearns as the representative of primary reform, why do you not criticise the democratic state convention for the same reason?"

A. "It is not true that Justus S. Stearns was turned down by the democratic convention for that reason. He was turned down because he had been a republican."

There's an admission that is certainly charming in its frankness. Mr. Ferris in his campaign for republican votes for himself on the ground that party is not important in this contest, confesses that he, a man then unknown as related to primary reform, was nominated by the democrats as the primary reform leader because he was a democrat, in preference to Mr. Stearns who was the most prominent and active primary reform champion in the state, but who had only then declared himself a democrat. Mr. Ferris' explanation is that Stearns "was turned down because he had been a republican," and yet Ferris and his party have the effrontery to plead for republican votes, and to argue that party politics should be subordinated in this campaign.

Is It Not True?

Now candidly, putting aside all prejudice and personal disappointment, is it not true that the best business interests of Charlevoix county demand the election of the republican ticket?

Is it not true that the republican nominees were placed before the people by a regularly called convention?

Is it not true that the republican county convention was composed of properly and legally elected delegates from every township in the county?

Is it not true that every man on the ticket is of well established reputation for ability and integrity?

Is it not true that the opposition ticket is the child of every anti-republican element that exists in Charlevoix county?

Is it not true that their recent "convention" at Boyne City was made up of every one of these obstructive elements?

Is it not true that there was in that convention an utter absence of any representative authority from any township?

Is it not true that the leading spirits of the combine were G. W. Crouser, ex-chairman of the democratic county committee, and R. W. Paddock, the defeated candidate for representative?

Is it not true that the few bourbon democrats in Charlevoix county are quietly laughing in their sleeves because certain republicans are aiding them in an effort to break into the court house?

Is it not true that with this fact goes the important fact that this same combine is making an effort to weaken the republican legislative majority in a sensational year by defeating the republican nominee for representative?

Is it not true, then that this resolves itself into a National issue?

Is it not true that, from a strictly business point of view, there is not one redeeming feature in the Boyne City ticket?

Is it not true that in the four leading county offices on the Boyne City ticket the "nominees" are democrats?

Is it not true that these questions should be carefully and candidly considered by republicans?

The largest genuine rainbow trout ever caught in Northern Michigan was taken from Bourbonais lake by John Hosset. The fish was 31 inches long and weighed 14½ pounds. It was beautiful marked.

LEVIATHAN FOR NAVY

BATTLESHIP GEORGIA IS VESSEL OF LARGEST TYPE.

Fighting Machine Launched at Bath, Me., Has Powerful Armament and Quarters for Her Big Enlisted Traffic in Efficiency on the Southwest.

The Delaware dreadnaught was launched at the Bath iron works on Saturday. This is one of the most formidable fighting machines of the kind in the world. It is 510 feet 3 inches long and 85 feet 4 inches in beam. The Delaware is the first battleship of the line of battleships which the Navy department has ordered to be built since the launching of the Georgia, the battleship of 16,000 tons, which was launched at the Cramp shipyard in Philadelphia last August. Fifty thousand people saw the launching of the Georgia, and as many more were within sight of the ship yard when she took the water. The launching was a very quiet affair as compared with the launching of the Delaware, which was witnessed by more than ten times as many people as were present at the launching of the Georgia. The Delaware is the first battleship launched in Maine since the launching of the Maine, the battleship of 12,000 tons, which was launched at Bath in 1901. The Delaware is the first battleship launched in Maine since the Maine, and the first warship launched in Maine since the launching of the Dixie, the cruiser of 3,000 tons, which was launched at Bath in 1904.

HEAVIEST WARSHIP IN NAVY.

Battleship Nebraska Launched Amid Crowd at Seattle.

The Nebraska, the heaviest and most powerful of the battleships in the United States navy, was launched at Seattle Saturday morning in the presence of many thousands of people. The launching was well handled, and the vessel was launched almost at the moment that Miss Mary Dunn, the sponsor, a young woman of the city, broke the bottle of champagne on the bow of the ship. The launching was a very quiet affair, the spectators expecting it was to take place at 11 o'clock, the hour set for the launching, and not knowing that it had been decided to launch the ship at 10 o'clock instead

TARIFF AND WAGES.

More Than All Else, Protection Protects Wages.

The Democratic platform denounces the protective tariff policy of the republican party as "a robbery of the many for the enrichment of the few." We cannot keep this assertion before the people and the more earnestly we affirm it will be literation and reiteration. Many earnest economists, with free trade leanings, of course, have asserted that the only thing which a protective tariff protects is labor. The Democratic party has declared otherwise.

The London freethinker some years ago declared ceremoniously that this is a fact. It would, of course, be the only thing which a protective tariff really protected if it has been asserted by many other statisticians that the protective tariff is all that keeps the wages of the American workingmen at the high level which they have reached. There are many people who would like to see these wages reduced to the European level. They say it is wholly contingent that the wage earners of the United States should receive wages so much higher than are paid by the worker in other lands. It is very likely that this is what constitutes a good many free-traders of this country. They believe that we should get down to the level of wages in Europe, and that the only way to accomplish this is to get down to a free trade basis. The platform of the Democratic platform of 1892 probably had this idea in mind when it inserted the tariff plank in which they declared.

We denounce Republican protection as a fraud and a robbery of a great majority of the American people for the benefit of the trusts. We declare it to be a fundamental principle of the Democratic party that the general government has no constitutional power to impose and collect tariff duties except for the purpose of revenue only.

On the other hand, the Republican party has always maintained that a protective tariff keeps up the wages of the workingmen employed in the manufactories from the low wages with which foreign competition threatens. The working men who have looked into this subject have fully overtoned that the protective tariff protects their wages. There is no doubt about it—Wheeling Intelligencer.

The President and the People.

Roosevelt himself is the paramount issue in 1904. He is stronger with his countrymen now than he was in 1902. He has honesty and courage and admirable patriotism. He has done many things above which have endeared him to the masses. Among these probably were his halting of Germany, England and Italy in their contemptuous raid on Venezuela, and his present attitude about the Panama canal treaty. These two brilliant achievements, as well as the other splendid results of his government, will gain him the enthusiastic approval of a sweeping majority of the American people on Nov. 8.—Leslie's Weekly.

Knows Not Where it Starts.

We submit the evidence of Judge Parker's letter of acceptance, the evidence of thousands of columns of Democratic editorial, the evidence of hundreds of utterances by leading Democratic statesmen, the evidence of the Democratic platform itself in proof of the statement that the Democratic party of today does not know where it stands on any of the great questions, and that it is seeking the president's without knowing or let the people in an unmistakable fashion what it would do with the problems if it should be intrusted with the government.—Kansas City Journal.

MANLY AND VIGOROUS

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT'S LETTER OF ACCEPTANCE.

He Meets the Democrats on Their Own Ground and Challenges Them on the Issue Between Free Trade and the Republican Policy of Protection.

In President Roosevelt's letter of acceptance the subject of the tariff is given great prominence. To the discussion considerably more space is devoted than to any other topic treated in the very lengthy letter. Rightly considering that the tariff is the chief issue in this campaign, the President has undertaken to convince the American people that the party of protection is the only party to which tariff legislation can safely be trusted. He will succeed, we feel sure. Never before has Mr. Roosevelt spoken or written so wisely and so convincingly on the tariff question. He recognizes that no tariff schedules can remain forever, and that enough revision must be made to meet new exigencies.

But the genuine underlying principle of protection, as it has been enunciated in all but one of the American tariff laws for the last forty years, has worked out results so beneficent, so evenly and widely spread, so advantageous alike to farmers and capitalists and workingmen, to commerce and trade of every kind, that the American people if they show their usual practical business sense, will insist that when these laws are modified they shall be modified with the utmost care and conservation, and by the friends and not the enemies of the protective system. They cannot afford to trust the modification to those who treat protection and robbery as synonymous terms.

Right here is the central fact of the situation. The Democratic party denounces protection as a crime, and yet asks to be empowered to revise the tariff. On this point Mr. Roosevelt says:

"Of course, if our opponents are not sincere in their professed desire to abolish the system of a protective tariff there is no use in arguing the matter at all, save by pointing out again that if on one great issue they do what they say, it is hardly safe to trust them on any other issue. But if they are sincere in this matter, then their advent to power would mean domestic industrial disaster of the widest spread and far-reaching as that which we saw ten years ago. When they speak of protection as 'robbery,' they of course must mean that it is immoral to insert a tariff designed (as is the present protective tariff) to secure to the American wage worker the benefit of the high standard of living which we desire to see kept in this country. Now, to speak of the tariff in this sense as a 'robbery,' is simply absurd in a literal sense, is not merely rhetorical, it is on its face false. The question of what tariff is less for our people is primarily one of expediency, to be determined not on abstract academic grounds, but in the light of experience. It is a matter of business, for fundamentally tariff is a business question—manufacturers, merchants, farmers, wage workers, good—around most all alike. Our experience as people in the past has certainly set shown us that we could afford in this matter to follow those professional economists who have contributed themselves to study in the closet, for the actual working of the tariff has emphatically contradicted their theories."

The Democratic attitude on the tariff is to be condemned from the language employed in the Democratic platform. Not only the promise of the destructive only a little at a time, until the country can need to the destructive process, nor the curious schedule plan that they can't be as bad as they would be if the House or the Senate won't let them—nothing could not help but—its thought of and tried Dr. King's New Life Pills and she got relief at once and was quickly cured. WAGES OR CHARITY?

Better to Pay Out Money for Labor Than to Give It Away.

Under date of August 29, from Hull, England, a prominent American, travelling abroad, writes:

"I receive the American Economist regularly and always look it over with interest. I feel sure you are doing a good work though its echoing, as I feel, the result will be evident in the coming presidential election. I see free trade here in full operation. When I go down town and buy a dress hat for six shillings that would have cost $5 in America, I imagine that free trade is a fine thing, but when, on my wife back, I am solicited for alms by a score of paupers and asked to subscribe to all sorts of charities for the relief of the poor, and possibly find myself "out" six shillings more before I get home, I wonder if it would not have been better to pay twelve shillings for the hat in the first place, and let the workingman take care of himself. I have no doubt that you have been impressed by the same way during your visits to Europe."

In the United States where Americans make hats for Americans at a wage, you may also buy a derby for $1.50, the equivalent of six shillings, but it will not be much of a derby. Americans are the best dressed people in the world, and their derbies cost them from $1.50 to $5, or an average of about $3. The difference in cost is cheerfully said for the extra money goes to the workmen in the shape of wages. In Great Britain 30 per cent of the population is out of work and in need of charity; in the United States, not 1 per cent. Which system works the better, free trade in Great Britain or protection in the United States?—American Economist.

HIGH AND LOW WAGES

HIGHER THAN ANY OTHER COUNTRY.

Mechanics and Laborers in the United States Receive Two to Five Times More Pay Than Those of England, Germany, France and Belgium.

Very instructive is the table which Col. Wright gives us to show the comparative rate of wages in the large cities of this and four European countries. It shows the wages on 22 lines in coals:

The free traders ask one question to the fact that most of these industries are independent of protection, so that the higher rates commanded by American labor cannot be traced to the tariff. If this were true the party could only forget enough and learn enough to realize it to quit trifling foolish on the tariff question it would be a great and permanent gain to the country.

FREE TRADE WITH CANADA.

It Would Necessarily Be Limited to Natural Products.

Democratic newspapers along the northern border and in New England are very urgent about what they term reciprocity with Canada. What they mean is free trade. It is also aimed directly at the American farmer and is intended to effect injury to him alone.

Much discussion on this subject must take into consideration several facts. In the first place Canada gives Great Britain a preference in duties on imported goods amounting to 33⅓ per cent in some schedules 50 per cent in others and 33⅓ per cent in all the rest. That advantage is given British imports in competition with American. If the advocates of reciprocity mean business they should begin with the demand that this policy of preference be abandoned. In fact, they never mention it.

In the next place Canada absolutely refuses to make any reciprocity deal that includes American manufactures. Hon. John Carthor has said repeatedly, in speeches in the Canadian Parliament and elsewhere, that reciprocity in manufactures is out of the question and the only reciprocity Canada will consider is the products of the mines, fisheries, forest and farm. He is the greatest Canadian advocate of the policy of free exchange between the two countries. Dr. William H. Montague, former secretary of the Canadian and now a member of the Privy Council, speaking recently in Providence, said: "I have heard it said that there may be a measure of reciprocity between the two countries. The time has gone by for that. We are now building up a protective policy of our own and mean to protect our manufactures."

Other statesmen of the Dominion speak in the same vein and no voice to the contrary is heard. It is clear that the Democratic talk on this subject is either ignorant or purposely deceptive, merely a play in the game of politics without the least assurance in it means free trade in any tangible form. Or is it purposely—But fair Nova

CHAPTER XI.

I hear men shouting the usual cry of a prince we visited me, and I answer to my signal and hear against the wall. A door burst before my eyes, some one appeared and cries, "I lost Lost! lost!" takes.

Suddenly I see my hand clasp my amazed. I am swung forward, and his mouth the cause of so many deaths are pouring and pouring into mine.

I realize that I am in a ghastly all that time and the fellow galoupes, and the wounded blood leaps to my head. I change myself from and pray heavily to my wife who has stood in spite of all, and dare not dare some more I can go to the relief of my wife.

My hands fall as I stare, hand now actually dead in the room alongside of a dead man. I see the blood flowing of half then gushes out from the wide hole in his throat. I see the blood flowing from the wide hole in his throat. I see the blood flowing from the wide hole in his throat. I see the blood flowing from the wide hole in his throat.

SHOWER BATH FOR FIDDLERS.

Children of the Flowers Kingdom the Strange Dreamers.

Among the more curious customs [illegible] with Japan is the custom of inflicting stately to the westerner traveling in Japan, portions there is some that seems less liberal as much as this which obtains throughout the flowery kingdom among the rich and poor alike of washing away their children's lies in a species of shower bath that is a cleanser of the physician as well as the mere being, says the Boston Transcript.

Allusions may play a large part in every form of Japanese worship. Because the shrine which is to be found on signed every home there is a way of the shrine which is to be found. The water for these is supplied from the roof. Suited before the [illegible] of the "tub" the [illegible] which is made to suffer the penalty of his many lies.

The scheme of world comes dashing down upon his defenseless head with a force that would make a robust man of the land was stars. But the Japanese are known there is no other way to [illegible] the souls of the injured god of truth, so he surrenders to the inevitable with a much better grace than their with which his western brother [illegible] and [illegible] the shower of his linen [illegible] reading about for the benefit of a amateur of [illegible] the [illegible] and [illegible] brought him to this unconfortable [illegible].

The shrine before which this novel bath is taken place resembles those which are so common in the lighter [illegible] conditions. The decoration of flowers and omamental [illegible] is much like that with which the pious Indian adorns the altar of the Virgin or of his patron saint. Only the hideous [illegible] of the Japanese [illegible] and shows that this is an [illegible] shrine. In the morning the reverent head of the house puts a vase, a little bowl, a [illegible] and a sprig of green upon the altar as offering intended to propitiate the god and then shows his blessing upon the family. When sickness comes a little tightful lamp is placed beside the bed to show him to the long hours of the night, during which, according to Japanese belief, he faithfully guards the household from evil harm.

Giacomo Meyerbeer went at everything fearlessly. The work of composing made him cautious, excitable and caused him many sleepless nights. This condition was always worst in the spring of the year. He did his best work, when the wind leveled the rain pressed down to the ends and humanity seemed to be in a state of [illegible] [illegible] relief. Meyerbeer [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

A New Definition.

At this late day in the campaign after the parties had declared their beliefs in their platforms as to primary reform, and their organs and orators had widely discussed the beliefs and defined the declarations, so that it should be certainly known what is the position of each, we have the surprising development that the position of the democratic party is not known after all, either to the people at large or to itself. An entirely new view is put forth by ex-Senator Heinze, democratic leader, in an address in the Michigan papers, the organ of the state gangs, which reverses the ideas of primary reform heretofore taught by that party. Instead of the greatest possible freedom and the broadest rights of men to seek nomination before the people, and of the people to vote for the nomination of any man they should prefer, this authority now says there should be no such right or freedom except upon filing a petition signed by 200 voters in each of 20 counties, for state positions, and by 100 voters in each of 5 lower 1a county positions. More than that, voters must be debarred from signing a second petition though they may have honored in signing the first. Of course, the early bird who wanted to be sheriff could hustle around and get his hundred names for who would refuse a neighbor's, and in many a town there would be no 100 left for the best aspirant, and so the field would be shut out.

But it is not criticism of the details of this new proposition that is intended here, but father of the fact of any new proposition at all—showing as it does that those who have been claiming for themselves credit for the paternity or the discovery of primary reform, and exclusive right of fathership and authority to define and classify it, have not themselves known what it was, and have been all off in their definitions. So that they now find it necessary to describe an entirely new and antagonistic doctrine, and to present that as the real thing. And these are the people who for months have proclaimed that they have a special right on the premises and should be given possession of the government to put it in operation, as the only ones who could be trusted to do it right. The people will be likely to wait until these doctors are at least agree over what they know what they mean themselves, before giving much heed to their demands.

Twelve years ago, Mr. Ferris, an ardent free trader, was denouncing the republican principle of protection and promising peace and prosperity if we could have "four more years of Grover." We got the Grover, but even Mr. Ferris can't remember the prosperity. Eight years ago Mr. Ferris, a rampant free silverite, was denouncing the crime of '73,' and promising bounties from if McKinley should be elected. McKinley was elected, but it would embarrass Mr. Ferris to point out the coin. Four years ago, Mr. Ferris, a frantic anti-imperialist, was declaring that McKinley's election would mean the fall of popular liberty before the encroachment of the monopolistic oligarchy. McKinley was re-elected, but liberty is still entrenched in Big Republic and other states and territories north of Mason and Dixon's line. Now Mr. Ferris is again in full cry against the malign results of machine rule if the democratic party should be left to control any longer, but the people have heard his cry of wolf too often to be greatly distributed by it.

Resolution.

The following resolutions were passed by the Pastor's Association of Jackson, at their meeting on Oct. 10:

Inasmuch as in the order of events our brother, Rev. J. W. Vicker, has been called to a new field of labor, and hence must never his connection with our organization, we desire to express our sincere regret at the loss we thus sustain, and to place on record our high appreciation of him as a brother beloved, and as a faithful minister of Jesus Christ. As a member and official of our association his duties have always been performed with painstaking fidelity, and our fellowship with him has ever been of the most pleasant and profitable character.

His carefully prepared papers, invariably upon themes of practical importance, have always been a source of edification and inspiration to us, while his loyal and fearless co-operation in the interest of our common cause, and in the aggressive work of moral reform has been our admiration and esteem.

We assure our dear brother that our best and most kindly wishes follow him to his new sphere of labor, and we earnestly pray for him a long and prosperous ministry in the coming year.

Latest War News.

The great Russian advance, which began with so much talk of driving the Japs out of Manchuria resulted in a crushing defeat for the Russians, with terrible losses. The Russians were driven back, but recovered somewhat, and checked the Japanese pursuit last Sunday and Monday.

The latest by wire this morning (20) states that the Japs, on Wednesday, the eleventh day of the battle, had again defeated the Russians, dectimating their ranks so greatly that the Japanese now have the largest number of troops in the field.

At this writing the armies are facing each other and resting for a final desperate effort.

Chances favor the Japanese, by reason of numbers.

SCHOOL NOTES.

Students' reports in the High school were sent home this week, and will be every six weeks during the year. This should secure more careful attention to the reports that would be given if parents were asked to sign them every four weeks.

A few pupils have been transferred from Miss Bacon's room to Miss Crego's, on account of a crowded condition in the Central third grade. The pupils nearest to the Lincoln building were the ones selected for transfer. If all children were started the school promptly at the beginning of the year it would not be necessary to make these transfers later.

A fine program is being prepared for an "Open Session" on Wednesday evening of next week. An admission charge of fifteen cents will be made in order to secure a fund for school periodicals and other purposes.

Edgar Smith, a young man from Marion township, has entered the high school. His strength, weight and quickness make him a valuable addition to the foot ball team, and his steady application to school work makes a good promise for scholarship. That is a combination always welcomed in the high school.

—Those "figures" as to county taxes are already doing business for the republican ticket. It don't pay to lie—or rather, it pays to tell the whole truth rather than part of it.

A good meeting was held at St. James Wednesday evening of this week. All the republican county nominees were there, and speeches were made by Judge Harris, Mr. Knowles and others.

He reports that these meetings were unusually largely attended and enthusiastic. At the latter the delegation reached approximately 1000. The meetings were intensely interesting and full of importance not only for Congregationalism but for the church at large.

Primary Reform Consistency.

The Detroit Evening News, is a conspicuous champion of Ferris and "primary reform." It is also a fact that in municipal elections Detroit has adopted the primary ballot system. In the News of the past we clip the following from a leading editorial:

It is surprising how machine orators can have the face to stand up before the intelligent voters of Michigan and plead for the continuation of the convention system of nominations.

Very good. In the same issue, in another editorial, appears the following:

One of the disappointments of the primaries is the defeat of one of the most efficient of the candidates for justice of the peace, Justice Stein and the nomination of the least satisfactory of the candidates, Office Teagan. This is undoubtedly due to the superior political craft of Mr. Teagan.

Just so. But what about the "political craft" business? The News and its ilk have strenuously held that the primary system was devised to eliminate this evil from politics. The primary system is held up as the only way to prevent the unscrupulous politician from corrupting the voters. How is this? In the same editorial appears the following:

One of the surprises of the primary election is the defeat of Wm. H. McGregor, who has conducted the office of the county clerk with ability. He has been one of the most affable and accommodating officials who ever held the office.

We are also surprised that a worthy and capable man could be defeated and an unworthy and incapable man nominated with the primary system, which has been held by these "reformers" to be impossible and yet in the columns of the chief reform organ we are told that the "superior craft" of unworthy candidate defeated a worthy and capable public servant, and all under the primary election system.

How is this for consistency?

GREAT FOR FIGURES.

The Democratic Stagwumpp Organ Indulges in Some Statistics.

Last week the county was flooded with copies of the East Jordan Enterprise, the official organ of the democratic-stagwump-soft money county ticket, and the democrat State ticket.

One striking feature of the issue is the copia of able documents that enlighten up its columns. Week before last it was "X," this week it is "statistician," both specially secured by the able editor to duplicate the editor of the SENTINEL.

The editor lays out work for himself that is more in keeping with the profundity of his intellect. Mr. Traverse devotes himself to the financial feature of the campaign. Figures and statistics are given to prove that Paddock and the rest of the democratic-stagwump ticket should be elected.

The editor of the Enterprise was always an authority on finance and figures. His erudition in the line of finance and figures has long been a household word in Northern Michigan. Not long ago Mr. Lorraine published a brochure on National finance that attracted very much attention—very much, indeed. In supplementary work, Mr. Lorraine formulated a finance bill which he hoped to introduce in the National house of representatives, but an appreciative public deprived the country of the only sane solution of the great financial problem.

The editor of the Enterprise was always great at figures. When the writer of this was at St. Louis last the past summer, he witnessed a wonderful exhibition, in which an educated horse displayed the same remarkable talent. The wonderful animal made his owner rich by feats in arithmetical work. The name of this horse was of a beautiful, glossy black, very much like Lorraine's finance statement, and he had the same striking propensity, we be lieve. He would add up figures with wonderful skill, but we were informed, on the side, that he had a secret human confederate—probably a sore head.

A year ago Mr. Lorraine figured it out that the county would make money by paying $300 for its official printing; this year, after carefully reviewing the figures he decided he would do it for $30, and do the same work as required under the $300 proposition. A great man with figures, this Lorraine!

This wonderful statistician also discovered last fall that the supervisors were running the county to ruin and stealing all the way from 16 cents to $1.25 each—a wonderful exposure of official corruption.

And now the Enterprise has discovered a new snare's nest, with which it is attempting to deceive the tax payers. The figures, on their face, show an increase of from $10,982.94 in 1899, to $14,556.71 in 1900, $17,911.15 in 1903, and $22,893.90 in 1904. As a matter of fact, Lorraine lies to the extent of $11,11.1 as to the county tax of 1904, as the records give the figures as $21,785.88.

As the greatest increase is that of 1903 and 1904 over the previous years, we confine ourself to that proposition. Mr. Lorraine knows, if he knows anything, that this increase was due to extraordinary but unavoidable expense. We append some of the items:

Paris Bridge washing plant	600.00
Taxing Cemetery	1 00.00
2 Charlevoix bridge expense, 1903	1,000.00
2 Charlevoix bridge expense, 1904	1,000.00
Court orders, 1904	3,000.00

In apportioning the county tax for 1903 the board took into account the Paddock from Iowa, which, upon the estimate of the county surveyor, required the building of 15 miles of fence on rural free delivery routes, the cost of which is estimated at $1,800. This item alone balances the increase of county tax of 1904 over that of 1903. The farmers know best whether or not that law is a good one, but we digress and discuss it. But the fact remains that Mr. Paddock, the democ-stagwump candidate for Representative, is responsible for this increase in 1904.

If the Paddock road bill does not suffice to explain the increase, we point to an aggregate expense of $6,496.34 in the years 1903-4 for small pay. What a pity it is that the epidemic could not have spread further and remained longer, for the benefit of Lorraine's figures!

No less futile is the effort of Lorraine to deceive the public with reference to county officers salaries and expenses. In 1899 the writer of this was clerk of Charlevoix county, at a salary of $100. Why should we pay more now? In 1899 he was county treasurer at the same salary. What sense is there in paying more now?

Does not the Enterprise know that Charlevoix county is developing? Does it not know that the population of Charlevoix county is increasing, and that an increase of population involves increased cost of conducting all branches of county affairs?

To make the matter more explicit we append the following certified statement of the county clerk of the county tax 1900 to 1904 inclusive.

Extraordinary expenses were:
Bond pitts bills allowed	$ 5,015.17

Assessed valuation, 1903	$ 4,656,407.00
County tax	17,911.15
Extraordinary expenses were:
Bond pitts bills allowed	$ 867.50
Charlevoix bridge	1,000.00
Charlevoix bridge	1,000.00

I hereby certify that I have compared the foregoing figures and amounts with the official records of said county of Charlevoix for the year 1900 to 1904 inclusive, and that the aforesaid figures above are correct and true to the best of my knowledge.

The tax levy in 1900 was $14,905.36, on a valuation of $4,000,756.00.

The post-mortem last year extended but $3,487.19, and the other expenses were ordinary running expense. And in 1903 the tax levy for the county was $11,525.56 on a valuation of $4,656,407.00. But in this year the poor commission expended $6,261.69, small pay bills amounting to $5 11.15, and the bridge at Charlevoix supported to the amount of $1000. From this it will be seen that these expenses alone in 1903 exceeded those of 1900 by $5,769.

Again in 1904 the board raised a county tax of $18,156.45 on a valuation of $4,656,407.00 and these same items of expenses were as follows: Small pay bills, $867.16, poor commission $1,850.88, City twenty bridge $1000.00 and washing water plant $600.00 and an increased tax of $6,244.89, and again in 1904 the board raised a tax of $21,785.88 on a valuation of $4,656,407, and audited small pay bills amounting to $5,015.17 and the Paris washing water plant $600.00 and the Charlevoix bridge $2000.00, an excess over 1903 of $8,873.73 and over 1902 of $9,011.13, while the tax levy of 1900 only exceeded that of 1900 by $7,352.92, and that of 1901 by $9,957.30.

The figures cited above are from the record of the proceedings of the board of Supervisors, as published from year to year.

Does this look as if the present candidates for county office or any other county officers were responsible for the increased raise in county tax?

This does not include improvements on the Ironton ferry, the Charlevoix County Normal School, $12,000, for State census, the Paddock road law, but just three items of expense above.

More Primary Reform.

Sheridan J. Colby, of Detroit, the author of the great Colby bill that Mr. Paddock, cover for last winter, was defeated under the operation of the primary election law. To a Detroit Free Press reporter he said:

"I am not kicking. I never kick. But the result of this thing shows that a man has to play politics and spend money just the same."

Certainly. But the Ferris crowd are preaching the doctrine of "pure politics." The primary system is held up as a remedy for all that is ailing in politics. Mr. Colby is good authority, and he gives "primary reform" and very black eye.

A Homeseeker.

Mr. Paddock and his spellbinders are alternating between "primary reform" and "increased taxation." Mr. Paddock might tell the taxpayers that a $4,000 item in the increase of county tax comes with the Paddock fence law.

He might, in restoring his record as a legislator, just tell the voters at the same time, that this amount covers the increase of the county tax of 1904 over that of 1903.

Some of these things, like chickens, will come home to roost.

Our concern is that the people when they have a chance to get at the facts.

Mr. Paddock and a distinguished orator recently held a meeting in Marion. The bills read: "Keep still and see the taxes grow, and keep in office the men who are responsible for the fact."

For downright cheap politics this takes the prize. Granting all that is said about taxes to be true, what have the republican nominees for county offices to do with it? What has A. J. Strond to do with county taxes. How can E. W. Coulter, or D. F. Meechy, or D. B. Fayton increase the county tax, in their capacities as county officers? Ask your supervisor!

What had the county officers to do with nearly $8,000 of small pox bills in two years? How could the county officers reduce the $4,000 in the fence appurtenant for Mr. Paddock's fence law?

The fact is, these screhead democrats are trying to get into office by deceiving the people. Who don't they tell all the truth when they are talking about county taxes? Why are they not honorable and fair and tell why the taxes are increased?

These methods will surely react, because the people can know the truth by investigating.

There has been no increase of county tax that was not caused by extraordinary conditions or extraordinary legal demands, and not one dollar has gone into the pocket of any county officer that has not been allowed by the board of supervisors, after proper scrutiny.

Elsewhere in this issue we give a statement from the records.

What Might Have Been.

Had Mr. Paddock been nominated by the republican county convention for representative he would today have been stumping the county for the republican ticket, from Governor down to coroner.

He would have been in harmony with the platform upon every question, including primary reform. He would have considered the nominees on county convention honorable, worthy, capable men, and would have endorsed every principle that he is now condemning, and condemned a dollar of an income that made mockery of political policy. If Mr. Strond had been defeated, and had accepted a place on a Republican ticket Mr. Paddock would have denounced him as a screhead.

The candidacy of Mr. Paddock in that convention was a tacit and unmistakable acknowledgement that he stood for its every act—primary reform included. But he was not and now he is—simply a screhead, nothing less.

In this state campaign there is but one real issue, primary reform, and that issue the republicans are well able and quite willing to meet their opponents. The republican position on primary reform is clear. It is rational, it is practical, and it is sincere. It proposes direct nomination of all officers in every division and district of the state where it is desired, and primary election of all the delegates to state nominating conventions and to any other conventions that the voters of the districts shall elect to hold. That this primary reform that reforms the primary in every primary election held in the state this year, the republicans have shown their sincerity by heartily and honestly participating in them. The democrats have shown their insincerity by avoiding such participation, and seeking to use the primaries to work partisan trickery.

I was assigned my seat silent. The old man was speaking in a low voice, but with sufficient emphasis to enable me to hear every word. Evening by evening he had been reading to his family the story of his life.

A wealthy citizen on my showing of good will and sense of valor, the informer had spared me the knout, but had sent me for life to wind storage for attempted treason. I had thought I knew my country, but I knew no.

After a while I was allowed to go to bed, where I lay staring at the light of the lamp, and thinking of the strange events of the day, and of the strange people in the room. I was so tired that I could not sleep. My head was burning, and I felt as if I should be delirious if I could not get some rest. Then I got up and sat on the bed, and finally I began to undress, without what, and the moment I had taken off my shoes I felt a cooling sensation of relief, and the pain in my head began to subside. I felt so much better that I was able to undress without what, and the moment I had taken off my shoes and stockings I felt a cool

THE FREE TRADE PARTY.

It is the Democratic Party as Much Now as Ever.

It is said to be the intention of the Republican Congressional Campaign Committee to circulate the free trade utterances of Boutwell Cockran in the last congress for the purpose of proving the free trade attitude of the Democratic party. It is of small consequence whether this propaganda is started, if it is doubtful whether anything that Mr. Cockran has said of late has had any effect in the result. The last Democratic National convention declared that the Democratic party is a free trade party, and the candidate who was formulated by that convention on a platform that free trade is destructive of American prosperity. The Democratic party in its two national conventions which it has held since the Cleveland administration and in the two national campaigns following them continued its Democratic free trade record. While other acts of Cleveland's administration contributed to the financial embarrassment and remembered the hard times attendant on the Democratic party was approved and adhered to in the platforms and upon the stump. The Congressional speeches of Mr. Cockran are no stronger therefore, to establish doubt as to the Democratic attitude against protection to American labor and industry. It looks like a waste of effort to circulate the Cockran speeches and to dignify Cockran more than is necessary. He is not a campaign issue, and while it will not make him a campaign issue to place the record of his oratory in the hands of voters it is a step in that direction. The American people have an evil memory for those who do not recall the best of free trade, and few American workmen have forgotten the empty dinner pails of the Cleveland regime. With free trade come hard times. Good dogs but the American workman does not want free soup. He prefers the conditions that enable him to pay his wife and those conditions, he knows, will be confirmed by the election of Roosevelt. He does not need to read Cockran to learn all this for he learned it by hard experience.—Pittsburg Chronicle.

Gold Candidate Without an Issue.

Not only are there no issues upon which the Democracy have been able to evince any interest or enthusiasm, but it is beginning to appear as if their candidates were a cold sweating disappointment. Since the famous telegram, which in the light of events was the only possible means of escape from immediate repudiation by a large section of the party, the gentlemen of Esopus has done nothing to develop the slightest interest in himself on the part of the masses.—Minneapolis Journal.

Some Home Chastisement.

The Democrats may as well drop the tariff issue if they cannot discuss it like men with cohesive convictions they will win no votes by pattering with the subject. This is a year for plain speaking. The voters of this country are without exception white. The tariff discussion. Don't be heard in the campaign seems to have been addressed to a nursery audience.—New York Tribune.

Not Welcomed Anywhere.

Judge Parker's pronouncement in favor of keeping down the American flag in the Philippines and scuttling from the islands has not met with the rapturous welcome in Democratic circles that the judge might reasonably have expected. When it comes to haulin down the flag Americans, without regard to party, are not enthusiastic over the business.—New York Tribune.

SENATE A BULWARK?

WOULD DEMOCRATIC SUCCESS RESULT IN TARIFF STABILITY!

It is by No Means Certain That a Democratic President and House Could Not Force Through Congress a Measure for Immediate Tariff Reduction.

The business interests of the country which regard stability of business conditions as indispensable to business prosperity are expected to be reassured and calmed by Candidate Parker's crafty suggestion that Democrats with the business world, assured by electing a President, Vice President and a majority of the House of Representatives, the Republican majority in the senate would continue in power to the business interests to make any tariff changes. These suggestions are obviously intended to bid for the votes of those believed to look upon a Democratic victory without dread or apprehension. Will it be, might it be so received and acted upon. Will the business interests be reassured and calmed?

We find in a recent editorial in the Cincinnati Enquirer, the leading Democratic journal of the Ohio metropolis, the following pertinent and pertinent remark:

"Can Parker and Davis be elected and the house have for the Democrats a small majority and there will be a Republican senate? Yes, it may be. It can be counted by even so young a lad which as Senator Allison of Dubuque and Platt of Connecticut have in the balance which are the arbiters of our government. It is the conservative, moderating establishment. It is not merely an obstruction. It is some side to the public mind, though irresponsible to the people in the same degree that the house of representatives is responsible."

Here is food for thought so that Democratic leaders and Republican majority in Congress ready to resist a demand for tariff revision, if a Democratic President and a Democratic House should come into power. Would Republican senators have the courage to withstand Democratic tariff tinkering?

Frankly it is there is much room for doubt. The senate now stands 57 Republicans, 31 Democrats and 8 Populists, a majority of 24. Allowing that Democratic gains would be reduced by the changes that have taken place with the advent of the fifty-fourth congress the election of 19 Republican senators would pass a Democratic tariff bill.

Could the votes of 12 Republicans be counted on in support of a Democratic tariff bill? Yes, in all probability. Recent events have shown that they could be counted on to support Republican measures even when that party could be overwhelmed. And they were thus in a measure, for less pointed than that which would be recognized in the desire of the country near November, when the Democratic party should be placed in control of a national administration and would assume the responsibility of making good some of the promises made during the campaign. Would the Democratic party be a Democratic congress? Would the Democratic party be a party that would be responsible? Would it be a party that would be responsible? Would it be a party that would be responsible? Would it be a party that would be responsible?

There is only one way to make sure that stability that we have had for years.

Elect the Republican national ticket!

What Would Happen?

Just now the entire Democratic press of the United States is earnestly engaged in the effort to prove that Republican tariffs have not been attended with general prosperity. Free, immoderate tariffs have not been productive of general prosperity. Free, immoderate tariffs have not been productive of general prosperity. The McKinley tariff of 1890 was injurious to the country.

Then the Democratic tariff of 1894 had nothing whatever to do with the period of want and truth that followed.

Then the Dingley tariff of 1897 had nothing whatever to do with the period of unexampled prosperity from 1897 to 1904.

That a protective tariff does not benefit the country as a whole.

That a protective tariff does not benefit the country as a whole.

That a protective tariff is unfavorable to the interests of the country.

That a protective tariff is a robbery.

That a protective tariff is a robbery.

Such is the tenor of these Democratic editorials, taken singly or in mass, what do you suppose would happen the instant we gave proof of protection if the Democratic party should obtain control of national affairs?

What did happen the last time the Democratic party had control of national affairs?

Cause and Effect.

Lower duties means more foreign goods imported; the more foreign goods imported, the fewer factories there will be manufactured in this country; the less manufacturing there is done in this country the less labor will be employed.—Grayling (Mich.) Avalanche.

Once is Enough.

The Democracy might another cyclone tariff such as that of the year of 1893, but it isn't likely to do it, since the people have no desire to exchange abounding prosperity for poverty stricken soup kitchens.—Chilton (Ind.) Citizenian.

ON TWO SIDES OF A RIVER.

Why the American Side Develops and the Canadian Side Does Not.

John H. Rafferty a prominent writer has started on a tour of Canada for the purpose, as he states, of finding out why it would be to the interests of the United States to a reciprocity agreement with Canada, and also whether the Canadian people have yet reached the point where they no longer desire reciprocity with their big southern neighbor. He is an ardent advocate of Canadian reciprocity, saying in his initial letter that there is not a question of national legislation so tremendously important to the interests of the North American people as that of a reciprocal tariff between the United States and Canada. This initial letter is dated from Buffalo and thereby hangs an interesting observation, made also unfortunate for Mr. Rafferty's purposes.

The observation referred to was first suggested, so far as our informant goes, by Congressman Walter L. Smith of this city. It is that there are at Buffalo and all along the Niagara river to Niagara falls and beyond, industrial establishments, plants of various kinds, driven by the power of the falls and giving work to thousands of wageworkers. This is on the American side under the fostering influence of the American protective tariff. On the Canadian side are beautiful Victoria park and the Sir Isaac Brock monument, all right in themselves, but speaking little for the industrial advantages on that side of the line.

The home of industry on the American side and its absence on the Canadian side must have an explanation. It is a part of the observation that needed that that explanation is found in our protective tariff policy of course American enterprise and capital are forces. Even though the advantages of Canadian enterprise are almost identical in character, there is a difference in our favor when it comes to developing industries and putting along side of those that successes and capital are not sentimental. They are not so sad to their country that they will not venture on auxiliary line, or to this case a river, and desirable as the tariff has been to equalize advantages to do so, industry thus stimulated, river is on the American side because the great market is on this side and because with the protective tariff in force that market can be reached profitably only from the home side. We have a good deal about the value of the Canadian market. Why of this Canadian market is so valuable, do these industries not locate on the Canadian side and enjoy that market without paying the Canadian tariff? The answer is that in fact our market with the home market, the Canadian market is insignificant. Mr. Rafferty and other champions of Canadian reciprocity admit that Canada is more deeply interested than we are. To hear the Hon. Oliver Mowat talk it is down between the two countries the Canadian side of Niagara will be on an even footing with the American side in bidding for the ever growing industries driven by the power of the falls. In that case there could be but one result; that industry would locate and remain on the American side under protection which would without protection be on almost between the two sides and in the centre of things some of them would go to the Canadian side. This would be particularly the case should Canada get a little the best of it in the unofficial reciprocal schedules.

It seems hard to have those industries remain on the American side and employ American wageworkers. Are we bribing up Canada or the United States?—Council Bluffs Nonpareil.

A Thoughtful Man.

M. M. Austin of Winchester, Ind., says what to do in the home of need, his wife had such an unusual case of stomach and liver trouble, that doctors could not help her. He thought of and tried Dr. King's New Life Pills and the get relief at once and was finally cured. Only 25c. at F. G. Hines & Co. Drug Store.

Certainty and Uncertainty.

With the close of the protective reciprocal treasonable commercial agreements which have been the principal feature of the Roosevelt administration, the Republican party will have to face the issue of the tariff, which has been pointed up the Imperial Aristocracy of our country. It is safe to the hands of the Republican party only if it is the Democratic platform that denounces protection as robbery and if that party is successful, to use the man who President's words, "uncertainty would take the place of certainty and reaction would surely follow to the injury of the wage earners and all who are now profitably employed.—Troy Times

Real Prosperity.

The "hippodrome" stump orators will find it hard to make headway among intelligent people against the showing of simple facts just published by the government bureau of statistics covering the last eight years:

	For cent.
Wage increase	15.4
Cost of living	14.6

This spells real prosperity for the farmers who raise the food products, for the buyer who has more money to spend on them, and for the mills which roots on both their activity and success.—Boston Record.

In a Lovely Position.

If protective tariffs are really responsible for the trusts the Democratic party, headed by Parker, Wolf, creates candidate, and by Davis, the pronounced monopolist in West Virginia, will be in a lovely position to cut those tariffs down in case of success at the polls. Wow! It, though.—Kansas City Star.

The Better Way.

Save Parker. Elect our President. I won't hurt you. I can't, because my hands will be tied by a Republican Senate. Don't be afraid. Elect me! There is a better way than this to tie his hands. Elect him to stay at home.

BOLSTERING UP A HOBBY.

Futile Efforts to Show Protection to Blame for Most Troubles.

When the coal strike was on a year ago last summer the free trade papers discovered that there was a slight duty on anthracite coal, and they began immediately to clamor for a removal of that duty, arguing that if that action could be taken, the anthracite coal supply would be immediately. Protection was to blame for the whole affair, they said—combine, strike, and all. And they grew for removal that duty for it was obviously an unnecessary duty, since practically the only anthracite coal available for American use was within the precincts of American territory. All went consistent with the facts knew that 2 cents or sixty-five cents per long ton would be an insuperable barrier to the law and had no effect whatever. Subsequently, however, the facts demonstrated this fact beyond dispute. All the clamor and agitation about coal duties during that strike excitement was downright humbugging, nothing else.

Lately we have had a little flurry in the beet industry. A big strike occurred in a very little beet sugar project of temporary embarrassment with some people who think they are, and for a time they had many times a day. This conference had no sooner ended than the free trade organs, as though under the lead of some one, began to scream for free cattle. The New York Post, in its zeal, is working overtime in the matter. "There is no should for the consumer," says the Post. "Millions of most consumers must be sacrificed for the benefit of the comparatively few cattle growers." What unbearable tommyrot all this is. The consumers of meat are not buying cattle upon the hoof, they are not dealing with the cattle growers, but with the big butchers. The importation of ten million cattle would not affect the situation one way or other provided the strike were on, so far as any public relief is concerned. The trouble was not lack of cattle but the refusal of the employes of the packing houses to return to do the work involved in reducing cattle to meat on the block.

The tariff tax on cattle comes nearer to home with this beef scalper. There is a small duty on beef, and it is a big one. The American farmer, confidently the most important selling of all our interests, and as a class are the best and since of this country, was put the bulk of the taxes in time of peace, and who furnish the bulk of the country's defenders in time of war, have a right to protection against the Mexican cattle owner, who can buy beeves for less after his stock for less money a day than it takes to buy a good cigar in America, even though that tariff did slight injury the price of beef. But if the slight injury which the beef trust are from the combine would actually be benefited by a removal of the duties for the beef combine could then say that the only ones who benefited were the foreign and the Mexicans without an ear for the American farmer, who can see how anything which would be of benefit to the beef combine could be injurious to the American farmer? In addition, this making an extra profit. In one breath the free trade Post says that the beef trust is an absolute monopoly, and that it is absolutely able to make beef cattle growers, and in the next that the cattle producer is bereaved of the benefit of the beef consumer. There is something wrong somewhere. The Post is in its effort to bolster up the free trade hobby, is as ridiculous as the man who is alleged to have cut his wife's throat to the accompaniment of the violin.—Cedar Rapids Republican.

Judge Parker's Answer.

At every turn the Democratic weakness his supporters have turned to him in impotence for a rallying cry and a battle call. And this is his answer. The trouble here is not with me, but with you. If you will do your duty, it is because there is too much Republican cowardice and timidity in Congress that will only drive Democrats out of the party. Democrats are for a policy of all things to all men, so that nobody can take offense. You tell me that this Democratic doctrine shows we must be more outspoken and straightforward, and I tell you that it shows, on the contrary, that we must be even more careful than we have been about the issue of a nervous ambiguity.

A Great Sensation.

There was a big sensation in Lowell, Ind. when W. H. Ernest, of that place, who was expected to die, had his life saved by Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption. He writes: "I endured insufferable agonies from Asthma but your New Discovery gave me immediate relief and soon thoroughly effected a complete cure. Similar cures of Consumption, Pneumonia, Bronchitis and Grip are numerous. It's the precious remedy for all throat and lung troubles. Price 50c. and $1.00. Guaranteed by F. G. Hines & Co. Druggist. Trial bottle free.

Let It Be Discussed.

The issue is being drawn in our platforms. If the country abandons the tariff, it will be because the people believe the evils of free trade would follow. Nothing would so inspire the experience of 1893 would be duplicated. The Republicans are for the tariff. Let it be discussed, and the final verdict of a change will be against free trade in the great mass of the American voters.—Kansas City Star.

WILLARD A. SMITH, Editor.

Worse Than Elliott Gubbins.

"The $8,151,189 drawn from the taxpayers of Michigan during the fiscal year is used indirectly to defeat the will of the Michigan taxpayers."

It scarcely seems believable that there could be a man in charge of a great newspaper, who is capable of saying a thing like that, and it is certainly deplorable that there could be; but that is quoted from a black-headed editorial (and black hearted too) in the Detroit Tribune of Oct. 19. The figures are the amount of receipts and disbursements in the treasury statement. They include $1,575,642 corporation taxes, not "drawn from the taxpayers," but paid to them in primary school money, $98,151 from U. S. government, not drawn from Michigan taxpayers but paid to them in relief from expenses of soldiers' home and agricultural college, $275,482 in transfers and refundings, mere detail of bookkeeping, and not drawn from anybody. And it would be legitimate to count out $1,049,189 which, though drawn from the taxpayers, is paid back to them through the county treasurers as delinquent county tax collections and cost of county issues, etc.

That was no mere extravagance of statement, it was a wanton and deliberate falsification daily persisted in after repeated corrections, intended to deceive the people and mislead them in the election. An idea it has a significance beyond the mere showing of the wickedness of these news papers and correcting their falsehoods. The argument urged by them and by the democratic candidates in this campaign in favor of abolishing all nominating conventions has been that their method brings the claims of the candidates directly to the people, with no juggling intermediary to impose them. But here is a juggling intermediary more the master of human nature, and, under state direct nominations the votes are at the mercy of such agencies. Not one per cent of them can personally know of the fitness of the state candidates, and they would be wholly dependent upon the newspapers for material to base their judgment upon; and such papers as these not only deceive and mislead them in every way, but they destroy the value even of the honest papers by making it impossible to know that any paper is the truth. They utterly destroy human confidence, and the value of all newspapers as public guides, and then propose to make the people wholly dependent upon them for guidance, as establishing for themselves a colossal graft to blind the candidates and at the same time defraud the people.

This has a very vital bearing upon the policy of abolishing representative nominating conventions and adopting direct nominations for state officers.

According to the reckless talk of Ferris and his fellows on the stump and of scrips and his associates in the press, Michigan is a seething mass of corruption and rottenness. It would be too indifferent to be indictable to govern the state, and have given it over to a gang of spoilsmen who have sold it in immoral corporations. The state is plundered of its wealth and the people are deprived of their rights. Malfeasance and misgovernment are to rule, and this state of Michigan with her two and a half millions of people, instead of occupying the position of special honor and pride among her sisters which we had fondly thought, stands revealed a bedaubed and disgraced member of the family, a warning to all and a guide for none. This is the picture that these assassins under the lead of the Big Rapids Teacher are daily holding up to view. It is not a sad worse than they paint it. It is in the least true, fellow-citizens of Michigan? Are not men who can profess such, indeed other delusions as deprived? And do we want such men to guide the affairs of our state and represent her before the world?

The people of Ann Arbor were treated to an amplified rehearsal of Judge Carfield's famous history, pretty good history, too, when he says the new law put the whole machinery and the appointment of all the commissioners in the hands of the secretary of state. Thus he unintentionally gives Fred Warner credit for doing during the former cost fifty per cent and saving to the state one-half of the money appropriated for it this time.

WHAT DO THEY MEAN?

DEMOCRATS ARE STRADDLING THE TARIFF QUESTION.

Bailey of Texas Says Protection is Necessary, but Declares that it is a Perversion of Government Power and a Downright Robbery.

In his speech in Brooklyn Aug. 20 Senator Bailey of Texas said:

"It is the shrieval of an idiot to talk about any party in this country proposing an repeal all tariffs and to us tariffs free trade. With the expenditures of the federal government it rends no embarrass us to scanger the Imagination, and grinding grinding every hair under the reckless extravagance of those now in power, that cannot hope to materially reduce the present rate of duty.

"Under the necessity of raising revenue to support the government, the Democratic party will continue to levy tariff duties, and it perfectly understands that those tariff duties will afford a protection to American manufacturers against their foreign competitors."

Standing alone, this would class as a moderate, sane and reassuring statement of the Democratic attitude and intention regarding future changes in our tariff system. To be sure, it is rather hard on some of Mr. Hanna's brother Democrats, the Cannon, Daly and Hoarke Cockran, who have in fervid orations again and again avowed their extermination of any and all custom house restrictions on commerce. But that is another story. Messrs. Clark and Cockran are content that they have been called "the dried of an hour," and they must deal with the issue accordingly.

We are, however, just now considering Bailey all by himself. There is much to concede. There is Bailey the moderate, the sane, the reasonable, and there is Bailey the radical, the Democrat, the destroyer. The of these traitors says that until we can obtain a constitutional amendment authorizing an income tax and a direct tax on all property we must stick to the tariff as a revenue producer with incidental protection that shall guard American manufacturers against foreign competition.

Turn now to the other Bailey, Harker in the same speech the Texas Senator said:

"Our Republican friends seem to be fearful around because we have dared to say that protection is a robbery of the many to enrich the few. Any law which levies a tax not for the purpose of raising revenue to support the government, but for the purpose of compelling an American citizen to pay more for the goods which he must buy is a perversion of government power and a downright robbery.

"If Congress could raise its revenue to support the federal government by levying an all uniform tax on all the property of this country, then the question of free trade would become a debatable one. But as the constitution stands today—and as it will always stand—the contention is absurd, and it is utterly impossible to obtain a three-fourths vote of all the states for an amendment to this proposition—we can never levy a direct tax without nullifying and violating so to render such a tax impossible except in extraordinary emergencies."

Here, we suppose, speaks the real Bailey. Here we have the free trade Bailey. Any law such you which goes beyond the purpose of raising revenue and compels an American citizen to pay for goods manufactured in a higher price than the goods which he needs buy similar goods manufactured in a foreign country is a perversion of government power and a downright robbery." Protection according to Bailey, does that and hence protection is robbery.

That being the case, when become of the attitude of Bailey No. 1? Will the Democratic party continue this protection this sovereign robbery? so as to "afford a protection to American manufacturers against their foreign competitors"? It cannot do this, Bailey contends, without "compelling his American citizen to pay more" and without sanctioning and perpetuating "a downright robbery." No, that is not what the Democratic party will do when it gets the power to do anything with the tariff. It will revise the tariff on purely revenue lines and eliminate protection robbery. It will reverse the existing order of things. It will give a tariff on articles which we do not ourselves produce. It will levy no tariff, or, as Mark Twain's tariff, on articles of a competitive character because it will not do to pay a tariff on such articles that will compel one people to pay more, etc. That is exactly what Bailey No. 1 means and intends. It is what the Democratic party means and intends.

Obviously the conservative course taken by Bailey No. 2 was an afterthought. Bailey No. 1 forgot himself and was too radical. Bailey No. 2 looked this down. Which of the Baileys is the real thing? No 1, we feel sure, the Bailey that regards protection as a robbery, a condition to be endured only until it can be eradicated, by a Democratic tariff that will raise the maximum of revenue with the minimum of protection. When the Senator from Texas went through Gounder-ing and straddling on the tariff question, when there is no longer any fear of lightning Democratic lightners voting away then he will stand undisguised as Bailey No. 1, Bailey the free trader.

Any Issue Will Do.

One Democratic newspaper says that the paramount issue this year is the "robber tariff." Another Democratic newspaper says it is constitutionalism vs. imperialism. Still another declares that trusts are the issue. And so it goes. The organs of the Democracy speak their "thirs in a permanent issue, but they cannot decide among themselves for public purposes which it is. Privately they agree that anything which will get the party into power is "a good issue." Morals: Vote after election.—Kingston (N. Y. Freeman.

A CRISIS.

Russian Baltic Fleet Makes a Big Chunk of Trouble for the Czar.

Matters at the front are lost sight of in the excitement created by the remarkable action of the Baltic fleet in the North Sea last Saturday night.

The fleet came up to a large fleet of British fishing trawlers, one of which sent up a rocket as a signal to the others. The Russian admiral lost his head, thinking of Jap torpedo boats and opened fire on the trawlers, sinking two and killing several men, and wounding others. They proceeded on their way.

England is greatly excited. Russia has "apologized," but Englishmen says that don't go, and gives Russia 48 hours to make ample reparation. Russia manifests a disposition to delay. England is calling in her squadrons, and has ordered 25000 reserves to be prepared to move.

Diplomats say the matter will be fixed up, but matters look critical.

No news of importance from the front this morning.

Word reached here of the death of William M. Shurtleff, of Cross Village which occured at the hospital in Ann Arbor Friday. His wife was at his bedside when dissolution took place. Mr. Shurtleff went to Ann Arbor over a month ago, in the hopes of finding relief, but has been confined to the hospital ever since by an incurable lung disease. His death removes the last member of a family of six, four of whom have passed away in the last few years.

A peculiarly fatal accident occurred at Ven Platten's millyard at Boyne City recently. Phil Johnson, a young man, was receiving a maple heart plank from the tramway and was placing it in a wagon, when in some unknowable manner two planks slipped away from the others on the tramway and falling close together, narrow with their edges the head of Mr. Johnson, pinning him to the wagon and breaking his neck in two places. He lived only a few minutes.

For 14 years he had served as clerk of Acme township, served as supervisor two years and was formerly justice of the peace.

—One of the things that Lorraine objected to the board of supervisors is that "it permitted the poor commissioners to audit bills." —Gaillier Evening News: From the eastern markets has come the suggestion that the upward tendency of potato prices had begun, with the coming of the cold days, and that the advance is likely to reach the markets in this section of the country before long. It was the opinion among Wexford county growers that the yield this year in the northern Michigan country would, regardless of the drouths and frosts, reach the average of last year, but the digging has depleted this confidence. It would seem, from reports from the country, that this year's average will not exceed one hundred and twenty five bushels, although there is an occasional field with a yield of one hundred and fifty or two hundred.

The Reason Why.

A Marion farmer recently expressed the opinion that Mr. Paddock was unjustly treated by the republican county convention. At a recent Marion meeting Judge Harris was asked why Mr. Paddock was not renominated. Mac replied "in confidence," that Mr. Paddock failed to get votes enough, and that he (Harris) had failed to secure a nomination several times for the same reason.

The question was properly answered. Mr. Paddock was "turned down" by the people, duly and legally represented in convention. He was not rejected by one man or any clique of men, but by a majority of all the delegates. And he was rejected for the very best of political reasons.

That he had been respecting with democrats previous to the convention is evident, as the first man he met after the vote, was Dr. Crouter, and acknowledged democratic leader. And he has talked with him and his political followers ever since.

Mr. Paddock's defeat is certain. Will it pay the western townships to knife A. J. Stroud, under conditions that now exist?

Think this over.

POLITICAL SLANDER.

Prosecutor Nicholas Franklin and Aldy Answers C. L. Lorraine's Slanderous Charges.

EAST JORDAN, MICH. Nov. 2nd, 1904.

To THE EDITOR:

In an article appearing in the East Jordan Enterprise, under date of October 27th, 1904, under the caption of "Just a Reminder," there was a most vicious attack made by the editor of said paper upon my character and official conduct as Prosecuting Attorney of Charlevoix county, concerning my course of action in the case of The People vs. Muthread and Chandler, wherein Mr. Lorraine complained that two innocent men were brought from the southern part of the state to Charlevoix county charged with the turning of what was known as Bush & Company's saw mill in the village of South Arm, and that after an examination before Justice Clement they were, upon motion of the prosecutor, discharged from custody—there being no evidence connecting them with the crime.

In the article referred to the editor says "The possible cause for action may be found in the statement given out at the time by Peter Muthead, brother of the accused, and owner of the burned mill, that he had received word as coming from the prosecution that if he would pay over $250, prosecution would be dropped." The editor then proceeds with the statement "For this fiasco the tax payers of the county had to dig down for the costs of the suit that are estimated at $1600." Mr. Lorraine then states, warm because the officer of the law did not prosecute the witnesses who had on their examination testified differently than from that contained in their affidavits upon which the suit was founded.

That the people may thoroughly understand the case and at the same time note how contemptible has been the action of the editor of the Enterprise in his efforts to misrepresent the facts in the case and to slander a public officer of the county, while engaged in the discharge of the duties of his office, a brief history of the case is hereby given:

Some months prior to the arrest of Muthead and Chandler what was known as Bush & Company's sawmill was destroyed by fire, there being strong evidence that it was the work of incendiary. This property cost something over $20,000. Mr. Peter Muthead had a lien upon the property to secure the endorsements of certain notes made by Alexander Bush, one of the owners of the property.

After the destruction of the property the Bushes being largely interested in the same, procured at their expense the services of an ex-detective and after months of time devoted to the investigation of the circumstances of the fire presented to me the affidavits of numerous witnesses and requested that Robert Muthead and Philip Chandler be apprehended for the burning of the mill. After most carefully considering the affidavits, in company with sheriff Dupree I called upon Judge Mayne at his office at Charlevoix where the affidavits in question were produced, and submitted them to him for his opinion. I was then and there informed by the Judge that unless I was in possession of some fact which discredited the witnesses it was my duty to proceed and came warrant to issue, and that an examination be had. Mr. Pearsoll and myself again laboriously many of the witnesses whose affidavits had been submitted to Judge Mayne, for his opinion, and finding nothing inconsistent with the statement made by the witnesses under oath, we warrant for the arrest of the defendants was issued. Upon examination had in the case the testimony of two of the witnesses whose testimony was vital to the case gave evidence radically different from that contained in their affidavits. The effect of this change in their testimony destroyed a link in the chain of circumstances which would be necessary to build the respondents for trial. Whereupon I asked the Court that defendants be discharged.

In the next issue of the Enterprise, Mr. Lorraine without first having interviewed any of the officers of the law and without knowing anything of the theory of the prosecution undertaked me for prosecuting the defendants Muthead and Chandler and sought by the article to bring the officers into ignomy and disgrace in the eyes of the public.

I immediately wrote Judge Mayne calling his attention to the unjust attack upon myself and officers as published in the Enterprise and received the following letter from him:

CHARLEVOIX MICH. Nov. 1st, 1904.

MR. A. B. NICHOLLS,

EAST JORDAN, MICH.

DEAR SIR:

Replying to your favor would state that I can recollect hearing the case of the Muthead and Chandler case referred to in the Enterprise. I have read the article in the Enterprise referred to and would say that I do not recollect the case referred to in the article, but I do state that the prosecutor was the person who, if there was either, knew the Facts. Further I feel in my case the prosecuting attorney, or officer, is the person who should make the first explanation, if anything is expected of me. I would further state that I do not recollect any conversation in the affidavits of the witnesses and state against defendants, stated to you and the sheriff that unless you had a conversation with the witnesses and had the affidavits changed so that the testimony would be in conflict with the testimony given before me that I would not issue a warrant, whereas when the affidavits were presented to me I was satisfied that the testimony was sufficient to hold the defendants for trial. As the case was dismissed upon my opinion I cannot form an opinion as to the sufficiency of the testimony. I do not recollect any such statement as you state I made to you and the sheriff. I do not recollect ever having had a statement from any one that the affidavits were changed so as to make such statements.

I am Yours Truly,

JUDGE MAYNE.

Upon receipt of the above letter from Judge Mayne, I at once called upon Mr. Lorraine, showing him the letter and requested him to publish it, or extracts of it, and thereby correct the erroneous impression as far as possible which he had created in the public by said slanderous attack upon the prosecuting attorney, sheriff and prosecutor. This, he refused to do.

Following the contents of Judge Mayne's letter to me and that the attest of Chandler and Muthead was made to the best of good faith and in the hope that the guilty perpetrators of this heinous crime might be apprehended. Mr. Lorraine has again attacked me through the columns of his paper and once more accused me with corrupt conduct in the case and with being willing to accept a bribe and then closing his libelous article with the statement that "the costs of the suit are estimated at $1600."

Mr. Lorraine asks why the witnesses were not punished when they did not adhere to the same thing on the stand as in giving their information upon which the warrants were issued. Had he consulted with any lawyer in the county he would immediately have been advised that to hold these witnesses on a charge of perjury, that false swearing must occur in a judicial proceeding and that inasmuch as the false swearing was in the affidavits the parties could not be held on a charge of perjury.

The next vicious act of the editor of the Enterprise is to distribute his libelous and misrepresentations to the voting population of the county, believing that by direct and secrecy he would defeat my re-election to the office of prosecuting attorney.

I board the accusations made against me by Mr. Lorraine against the Muthead arson case as willful, false and malicious, and charge him with a purpose in so doing, that when he believed the venom of his pen dipped into the ink of description had had time to sink and prove most fatal to my re-election.

I also brand as a falsehood the statement of Mr. Lorraine that the expenses of this Muthead case were nearly $1600 as they were actually less than $200.

I also brand as willfully false and malicious the statement of Mr. Lorraine that the prosecution if paid $250 would dismiss the case against the defendants, as at no time was any such proposition made, directly or indirectly, nor was there any intimation of the kind.

Yours Respectfully,

A. B. NICHOLLS.

Election Returns and Concerts.

Arrangements have been made whereby full election bulletins will be received here on the night of election. In connection with the arrangement the Charlevoix Concert Band has arranged to give a concert at the opera house on that evening. Election returns will be sent to the opera house and read from the stage during the concert. Admission, 25 cents, for the benefit of the band.

Bulletins will be received at the Western Union office and sent to opera house by messenger. At Lapeers the telegraph office will be closed except to those desiring to fill newspaper specials. It should be unnecessary for us to state that a crowd in the telegraph office during the receipt of returns will seriously impair the accuracy of the work.

Go to the opera house election night.

Still Another Lie!

We were told last week by one of the supervisors that the Board voted to have a statement published showing the amount of the county indebtedness, the rate of interest being paid but refusing to state what the debts was created for? Taxpayers are useful as supplying funds for the machine but when we ask to know how the funds are expended we are politely told to go home—work and earn more money for increased taxes! Why should not the people know for what they have been plunged into debt by the county officers? Why should they keep in the dark a single man who will assist in hiding this information from the people? Give us a new deal of officers throughout! Said Boston Enterprise.

There is another pre-election lie. Lorraine was told nothing of the kind by a supervisor, because the statement is not true. The board voted to publish a full statement of the indebtedness of Charlevoix county, and just what indebtedness is for, and rate of interest paid, for each debt.

In his comment Lorraine says, "Give us a new deal of officers throughout." Well what have the county officers to do with the county indebtedness?

"Why should not the people know for what they have been plunged in debt by the county officers?" Such a question could emanate only from the brain of an ignorant and unscrupulous demagogue.

There is not a voter in Charlevoix county who does not know that the county officers have nothing whatever to do with creating a debt, either directly or indirectly, and Lorraine knows it himself.

The foolish lies of the Enterprise are already making votes for the republican ticket. The county tax increase lie has exploded, the shous and dollar appropriation story has become back in close to nothing, and the lies from the Enterprise at this late hour will avail nothing.

More "Enterprising" Lies

Lorraine's East Jordan paper cuts some capers in its last issue against the republican county ticket in general and two of the nominees in particular—Dayton and Nicholas.

It is needless to say that the motive is not legitimate partisanship but personal grudge. Lorraine has had a rod in pickle for Dayton since the latter, on the board of supervisors, a year ago, was active in frustrating Lorraine in his hold-up scheme with reference to the county printing. This is the last issue of the Enterprise before election, and there can be no more lying, but we venture to ask why Lorraine did not spring these lies before. So the people might digest them and judge the case without impulse or error?

Lorraine's attack on Prosecutor Nicholas partakes of the same character of falsity and journalistic trickery, and here, too, is a cowardly, personal and vindictive in its nature.

In both cases the Enterprise lies, obviously lies! In both cases Lorraine is inspired by a venomous disposition to get even with old enemies, and pay old scores.

More than a score of times Lorraine has proven himself to be an irresponsible old termagant, devoid of either decency or honor. The people know him, and they will have no use for him.

A Base Libel.

We wish that every voter in Charlevoix county had been on State street, East Jordan, on Friday evening, Nov. 30th, when the Mulford band were giving their weekly street concert, and have seen D. S. Payton machine republican candidate for county treasurer, as he came out of Pepplin's saloon. Noted his condition, and then to ask themselves if they wanted him to have charge of the county funds for the next two years! East Jordan Enterprise.

The above is not only a lie, but is a libelous lie. D. S. Payton can and will prove that he was sober that day, and that he was not in Pepplin's saloon. Furthermore, he will prove it by a number of reliable witnesses.

Yesterday Mr. Payton began proceedings against C. L. Lorraine for libel, and the unscrupulous slanderer will be made to pay for his lie.

It is high time this human reptile had his fangs cut.

Disadvantage of Extreme Old Age as a Vice-Presidential Candidate.

The Democratic vice-presidential candidate is a very old man. It is said that he had forgotten more than some younger men have ever learned. This is probably true. He certainly has forgotten a great deal among other things he has apparently forgotten that only a few years ago he said in the course of a speech delivered in the United States Senate:

"I am for a tariff that will yield all the revenue for the economical and proper expenditures of the government, and in that tariff I believe incidental protection to our home industries. That is probably true. It has been regarded from the foundation of the Government, it ought to be so now."

The venerable vice-presidential candidate must have forgotten that he ever made that qualified avowal of adherence to the doctrine and policy of protection, for in his speech of renunciation, on Wednesday, Aug. 17, 1904, he informed the St. Louis platform makers that the most acceptable declaration of principles at once sane, safe and final. Yet the St. Louis platform declares:

"We oppose protection as a robbery of the many to enrich the few. How does it happen that Henry Clay, away back now regards protection as a robbery of the many to enrich the few, which, only a short time ago—a very short time in a life of four score and a quarter—he regarded protection as eminently "right and proper?" It must be true that he, a very old man, has forgotten more than younger men have ever learned. It must be that he has forgotten that he was ever in favor of the thing which in the platform that he now accepts as seemingly as safe, sane and sound as concerned as a robbery of the many to enrich the few. Extreme old age and extreme forgetfulness are a singular combination of defects in one who if elected, might be called upon to discharge the duties of the President of the United States.

Political Nonconcepts.

We have, therefore, Judge Parker as the Wall Street syndicate's candidate upon the Democratic platform and writing a financial plank of his own, and Mr. Davis, the representative of the tariff and of trusts, trying a lecture to his Democratic free trade associates and practically avowing his allegiance to the principles of protection as embodied in the Republican platform and enunciated by the Republican speakers. We fail to see upon what grounds any appreciation of political consistency can make any appeal for support to either element of southern Democracy.—Louisville Post.

Coincidences.

The number of coincidences of adversity and disasters to be met with in the nation is so large that it is difficult for the Democrats to explain it with credit to the last Democratic administration. The number of coincidences of prosperity under Republican administrations is so large that it is difficult for the Democrats to explain them without giving the Republicans a disagreeably large amount of credit.—Lewiston (Me.) Journal.

Confidence That Inspires.

The conductors of the Republican party this year is the healthy and encouraging sort. It is not the sort of hope somewhere that makes the pessimists lie down and sleep, but rather the sort that inspires courage to work effectively. It is the sort of confidence that makes men who great interests not trust to luck, but stick to the active duties of good work, most instructive wide-awake work.—Baltimore American.

THEY LEARN NOTHING.

Bourbons Can Talk About Nothing but the Tariff.

The Democratic party is never right at the right time. It is not certain that it is ever right at any time, but it sure to be wrong if possible and never fails to be inopportune in making a proposition.

The main argument on the Democratic side this year is that protection is robbery. Many of us favor a tariff of the president himself. It may be, but there is no argument in that, only vituperation and all unfairness. It is protection that forms the theme of controversy and the base line of controversy against it is that it is robbery.

For the last half century there have been but one free trade country of any consequence in the world. There is Great Britain. To-day the only free question pending is that concerning whether there shall not be a return to the protective policy. Just when the last of the great commercial nations adopts the protective fold shows vigorous signs of throwing off Cobdenism in the adoption of a policy that apparently seemed so much wicked but put the United States at the very head of the procession. Does the crazed free trade Democrat mean that policy as robbery?

The Republican party can scarcely be blamed more heavily than one about protection. It begins to seem less than one precipitated for the cause of overthrowing the policy under which the nation has taken its place as first in influence in the information of family of states, and beyond all comparison the most prosperous on the globe. Just when protection seemed a swerving into a final overthrow Great Britain is the time chosen by the Democratic party in the United States to make its other assault on that policy. It really does seem impossible for the Bourbon to learn anything. But what the man can talk about except tariff—Buffalo News.

Parker's Speech Belied Dowie.

As a specimen form of Parker's speech of acceptance the following is about as good as any:

"I am for tariff reform, but I couldn't do anything to relieve the trusts. Dowie, if he should succeed in office, because the Republican speech wouldn't let me. I am against the trusts, but I think that there are some of the greatest men now among the common law is sufficient to accomplish the purpose. I am sure that I don't worry over the idea that I would disturb business conditions. As for labor disturbances that are all right in one place and wrong in another. Capital is also right and wrong, therefore, capital and labor have no reason to worry over my election. In regard to the money question, I said a veteran, and really that's all that I can say about it."—New Jersey City Journal.

How It Might End.

The New Orleans Picayune says: "President Roosevelt's team of service is about to call in a number of spirited horses, at out of disaster, in all the great business centers—the country." The Picayune evidently believes that Parker will be elected. Only in that event is there any likelihood that its calamity prediction will be realized. If the country should come to believe in such a possibility there might be a repetition of the panic of 1893, when a prosperous period was brought to a close by the election of Cleveland—San Francisco Chronicle.

Will Agree With the President.

Who among our workingmen is willing to favor a tariff change which would reproduce in the country the situation following such a change in 1893? Who among our workingmen does not see the wisdom of Lincoln's message which urged the Congress assembled in the Extraordinary session of 1861 to "Let well enough alone?" The interest of every workingman is against the proposed revision of the tariff.—Ottumwa (Ia.) Tribune.

HIS BALANCE SHEET.

Splendid Showing Made by Uncle Sam as Fiscal Matters.

That celebrated campaign paper, "Uncle Sam's Balance Sheet," with its convincing array of statistics demonstrating the contrasts between Republican and Democratic management of national affairs, in our issue of 1900 proved, brought down to date. It is now distributed by the American Protective Tariff league, and is available in issue of small quantities for campaign use. A new and striking section on the poster will attract attention and furnish a complete answer to the Democratic contention that the increase in cost of living has far exceeded the increase in wages since the revolution of protection in 1897. In the extreme upper left and right hand corners of the poster are the figures which tell that the increase of wages has far exceeded the increase in cost of living. In the upper left hand corner, directly above the portrait of half-starved Uncle Sam, as he appeared in the period of Democratic evil making, appears the following:

Savings Bank Deposits,
$1,747,961,280.

In the opposite corner, above the prosperous portly figure of Uncle Sam as he has looked ever since the passage of the Dingley tariff law in 1897, is the contrasting statement:

1903
Savings Bank Deposits,
$2,335,204,845.

The gain in savings deposits in 1903 over 1894 is $1,187,243,565.

That enormous total represents the gain of the wealth of wage earners if they saved that much more they must have saved that much more. The increase in wages must have exceeded the increase in living expenses in no other way could the increase in savings bank deposits have occurred.—Buffalo News.

Do the Best Thing.

Every man wants to do the best he may for his country. Do you think it has for our country at this time? It is an experiment that has failed in Great Britain, that has been discarded by nearly all the great Democrat powers, and not proved such a signal failure when practiced, even to a small extent, by the United States?

It is for you to decide and done now. If you make a mistake you will have to bear the burden. You will have to shoulder the responsibility. You are certain that under the policy inaugurated by the Republican party the country has prospered, but you are doubtful what fate the business men of Democratic policies might forfeit you.

It is not your duty, therefore, to yet well enough alone, to refuse to try experiments and therefore unless it is plainly shown to you that such experiments and such theories are more likely to result in benefits now than they have when tried before?

The Democratic party points to success. The Democratic party has had period in a succession of years which party will you ally yourself with—that party which has failed or that party which succeeds?

No Chance of Democratic Harmony.

It is not an unjust criticism of the Democratic party to call attention to the fact that any programme of unity and harmonious action is impossible. It is as it is now constituted. The element of a democratic solidarity is not in this time would be superior a bitter and irreconcilable war for supremacy on the part of each of its constituent elements. Congress instead of being an arena of debate for Democrats and Republicans, would become the scene of another family row such as erstwhile Cleveland's second administration—Iowa Homes, Recorder and Leader.

Truly a Fine Season.

Money in the bank and when for the opportunity to loan it to those who should be can do so minded. The confession that rush through it all is that the safety of the country lies in the Republican Senate. The position, so far as such persons might act in that manner in that though, the Democrats would like to rip things up and carry the same destruction to the country that they did to the Democratic party in 1896, they won't be able to do it, because the Republican senators stand in the way, will prevent that unwise and will protect the country against Democratic disaster.

And that is a fine reason for voting the Democratic ticket, isn't it? Because, no matter how vicious are the Democratic tendencies, for how bad the Democratic leaders are on carrying out their evil policies, so disastrous to the interests of the people, they won't be able to do any damage, because the shield of the people, in the form of Republican senate, will save the damage threatened, and protect the people. An evil bid for votes, it is, sure enough.—Salt Lake Tribune.

Mexico's Wealthiest Citizen.

Gen. Luis Terrazas, the wealthiest man in Mexico, and said to be worth at least $100,000,000, has been granted a four months' leave of absence and is expected to make a tour of the country. Gen. Terrazas is probably the largest individual land owner in the world. He owns in fee simple approximately 20,000,000 acres of land, which is divided into fifty farms, ranches or ranches. No one, not even the Central Mexican, knows the number of cattle he owns, but it is roughly estimated that his herds approximate 1,000,000 head, of which about 200,000 are cows. He also owns several hundred thousand head of horses and mules. An army of more than 10,000 men are kept constantly employed on his ranches.

Church Plate Recovered.

Bishop Gallor of the Tuscaloosa diocese has recovered a valuable silver communion service which was stolen from his Memphis residence two months ago. The burglar was traced to Kansas City and thence to Denver, to Angeles and San Francisco. The porter had been passed in the last named city. It was relied by the police and returned to bishop Gallor.

NOTE FOR DEMOCRATIC CRACKERS.

Hitched to the bottom, these charges of Republican extravagance merely show that national expenditures are steadily growing, and that they will continue to grow, no matter what administration comes into power. Democratic "keynotes" clamor vaguely for "economy," but they are nearly too cautious to specify the economies they will make. Are they willing to abandon our programme of naval development, to reduce the army, to abandon the Panama canal, to cut down pension expenditures, to forswear river and harbor improvements, or to abolish the rural free delivery service? The Democratic platform, parties and leaders, on all these subjects, and many more, are enough to say that every dollar expenditure should be cut to a point historically demonstrated to be safe and economical. That is the single dubious economy the Democrats unity in condemning the president. When Mr. Davis and the World again assail Republican "extravagance" they would do well to tell us what benefits reforms this Democratic economy would "economize" has in view.—New York Tribune.

Made Clear.

Bryan's tariff plank, in which he assured the Democrats to announce protection as a robbery of the many to enrich the few, is rather at variance with the Bourbon claim that it is not opposed to the system which safeguards American labor. It is a good thing that the Nebraska man was permitted to make the position of the party of which he is still the chief, and not the nominal leader, perfectly plain, otherwise we should have heard Parker's stump orators assert that he is not disposed to strike at the protecting industrial system.—San Francisco Chronicle.

NO PROFIT IN DECEPTION

Incident in Proof of Statement Made by Commissioner Ware.

Eugene F. Ware, the commissioner of pensions, was asked the other day if much deception was practiced at the pension office.

"Much, much," he answered. "Deception doesn't pay in the long run, and men are coming more and more to realize this truth. Deceptive methods, to a greater or less degree, in the selection of the POs in the chilliestaverns, his decription harmed himself more than anyone else.

"In a chilliestaverns, Mr. Ware have to tell you, I felt a chill for their evening meal. They asked what the rates were, and prices were quoted labor disturbances that are all right in one place and wrong in another, capital is also right and wrong, therefore, capital and labor have no reason to worry over my election. In regard to the money question, I said a veteran, and really that's all that I can say about it.—New Jersey City Journal.

Has Been Tried Three Years.

The sober second thought of Theodore Roosevelt, when tested down to the rock bottom, is that the rash and aggressive spirit he is liable to unbridle the country to foreign complications. Mr. Roosevelt's experiences for three years—for three years of the period of full swing of his administration during that time when never before the world was what he would do and what he would not do. What step has he taken in any foreign matter which his critics would not have taken? What has he done to unbridle the country in foreign entanglements or to imperil its peace? What policy has he followed which is open to criticism? If he is full of dreadfulness would not the three years give some evidence?—Philadelphia Press.

Snug Harbor for Old Melodies.

No danger of more popular melodies that are almost forgotten passing altogether into oblivion so long as colleges have brass bands are in existence. It always has been a custom with the Substitutionists to remember the popular air that has caught on and set the college boys to whistling and their sweet corner meetings, or a March to play during to and from barracks. The Salvation army bands scattered throughout the city are made up for the most part of college-bred players who are gathered entirely by ear. The tunes they play are never in print or written out. The musicians never meet for rehearsal except when they are actively engaged in salvation work. Once they get a popular melody they have no difficulty in march to suit popular taste. They never go out of it, no matter how long the tune has been relegated to the boneyard by the more virgin public.

Three or four times every Sunday a Salvation army band marches through Greenwich Village passing away of "Hilawha" and "Bedella." Another has taken from the West Side through Thirty-fifth street to Broadway, where, according to "Secret Service" roll "Home My Happy Home for You."

ANCIENT CITY FOUND.

FORMER HOME OF GIANT AZTECS IN ANDES.

Homes Deserted More Than 5,000 Years Ago Are still Startling and Comparatively Well Preserved Relics Matched Images in Marriage.

An ancient city deserted for 5,000 years, but now unearthed by hunters of relics bought and sold in the markets of Central America is reported to have been discovered in the Andes Mountains, 20 miles from Ancash, Chile, by Prof. Hans Gaul, of the Berlin Museum, and Wilhelm J. Hansenning of New York, who has spent several years in South America on the expedition, which extends to and greatly in the enlargement of our knowledge of the ancient Aztecs, who, centuries before the Spanish conquest, ruled the Andean country, and, according to the theories of some learned men, were the ancestors of the Indians of Mexico and Central America. The discoverers have written home that the city is in a good state of preservation, considering the antiquity of the place, and that it is one of the most startling relics of the Aztecs yet found. The city is built on the plan of a Roman camp, and is surrounded by a wall, the stones forming which are cemented with a mortar so hard that it resembles concrete. The walls are pierced by the doorways of six gates, which are still in good condition. The city is about 1,000 feet long and 500 feet wide. Some of the houses are still standing, and are of a type which has been found in the Peruvian ruins, consisting of a single room, with a door in the middle and a window on each side. The roofs are gone, but the walls are in good condition. The city is built on the side of a hill, and the houses are built in terraces, allowing the roofs of one row of houses to form the floor of the next one above. The city is laid out in streets, which are at right angles to the hill, and are from 10 to 15 feet wide. The streets are paved with large stones, and are in good condition

Darragh's Record.

The eleventh congressional district never had a congressman who did more or better work than A. H. Darragh.

In the 57th Congress he was appointed a member of the committee on invalid pensions. No committee of the House has more arduous work to do, and no member of that committee was more faithful in attendance at the meetings than Mr. Darragh, or more diligent or successful in the work accomplished. In the two sessions of the 57th congress, 2171 special pension bills were passed, involving a careful investigation by the committee in each case and examination of the mass of evidence presented in support of each claim.

Mr. Darragh supported in the Committee and in the House the bill granting substantial increases to those soldiers who had lost limbs in the service.

He supported in the Committee and in the House a bill proposing to grant a rate of $50 per month to all veterans of the civil war who had served ninety days in army, had been honorably discharged, and were now helpless and required attendance, without regard to whether or not the disabilities were incurred in the service. This bill was favorably reported by the committee of which Mr. Darragh was a member, passed the House, but failed in the Senate.

He favored the passage of a service pension bill, asked for by the member of the G. A. R. encampment at San Francisco and exerted himself in behalf so that proposed measure.

During Mr. Darragh's service he has succeeded in securing the passage of eighteen special pension bills in behalf of old soldiers and widows in the Eleventh district.

Through his efforts in the pension bureau, 125 original and 100 increases, restorations, etc., of pensions have been secured for old soldiers and widows of this district.

Traverse City had been asking a public building. For many years she had asked in vain. Immediately after his election, Congressman Darragh went to work on this matter. He secured an appropriation of $375,000 for a postoffice and custom house which is now in process of construction.

Liberal appropriations have been secured for the maintenance of the Mt. Pleasant Indian school and for the construction of new buildings.

He introduced in the last session of Congress a bill providing for a storm-warning station on Beaver Island, in Lake Michigan, with cable connection with the main land, with a limit of cost of $20,000. This bill has been favorably reported by the committee on Interstate and Foreign commerce and is now on the calendar of the House.

The excellent work accomplished for these counties is evidence of the influence exerted at Washington by our representative and an indication of what may be done in the future.

"I should say the direct vote system is a practical proposition for the smaller districts, but not in the larger divisions, where a convention system secures much better results. Michigan should certainly weigh every feature of her proposed law carefully before she places it upon the statute book."—Judge of the Supreme Court of Minnesota.

Eight million dollars of state taxes levied by "the machine" in 1903, is what the great reformer James K. Scripps, says in his editorial of Monday morning Oct. 17, the morning of the opening of the primary election polls in Wayne county. The great reformer James E. Scripps knew when he published that, that the total amount of state tax in 1904 is $2,206,347.99. Leaving out the $600,000 mill tax, the amount of which is fixed automatically and is not in control of the administration nor appropriated by the legislature, the amount of state tax this year falls to $1,606,347.99, instead of $8,000,000.

Manistee democrats are in revolt against a machine of their own, and all of the nominees of their county convention have refused the nominations. Frank L. Fowler, nominee for prosecuting attorney in his letter to the chairman denounces the manipulation by the gang at the spring convention, which fixed the delegates to the state convention an "in the interests of the party" excluded him from the delegation as an "injurious factionist, whom they now nominate on the county ticket. The machine so denounced by all the nominees, then, was the machine that fixed the delegation to the state convention which nominated Mr. Ferris in obedience to the Cadgie-Burt Duckpigeon machine, and Mr. Ferris wants to be governor as a protest against machine politics!

Call for a "Hunch" nickle cigar when you get your morning smoke.

Just Before the Battle.

The trouble is nearly over. Next Tuesday the people of Charlevoix county will decide the local questions that have been disturbing their sleeping and their waking hours.

So far as the SENTINEL is concerned, it has no apologies to make for anything it has said. It has believed, and still believes that no republican, who believes in republican principles and realizes the importance of the forthcoming election of U. S. senator, can consistently vote for H. W. Paddock for representative.

The SENTINEL has believed and still believes that the "machine" cry is only the wail of disappointed office seekers; that the claim set up that the county convention was dominated by any man or set of men is purely imaginary, and is only a "stay-thief" cry set up to divert public attention from the true culprits. No man or set of men can control a single vote in a republican convention in Charlevoix county.

The opposition to the republican ticket is, to all intents and purposes, democratic. All but one of the nominees for court house offices are democrats. The Boyne City "convention" was called as a democratic convention. That body only represented six out of fifteen townships, and not one delegate was elected by any township caucus.

The "machine" cry is of democratic origin, and its aid they hope to draw enough republicans to get into the court house. Will republicans permit them to do it.

But, for the moment ignoring the political phase of the question, we believe that the best interests of Charlevoix county demand the election of the republican county ticket. To that class who always "vote for the best men" we believe the republican ticket, by comparison with the Boyne City tickets, commends itself. We do not believe that the well-meaning sensible citizen will vote to put in office the aggregation that was produced at the Boyne City "convention."

Furthermore, we believe the people will by their votes next Tuesday emphatically condemn the unscrupulous methods that have been used by the opposition to gain votes. They have not only been dishonorable, but they have been actually foolish. They have been an insult to the intelligence of the people.

And so, we await the verdict, firmly believing that it will be emphatically in favor of the republican county ticket by the safe majorities.

Another New Lie.

As a last resort the opposition is circulating the story that eastern candidates on the republican county ticket are "trading off" and "selling out" the western candidates, and in support of their story point to the Boyne Citizen, which shapes it course strictly with an eastern view.

This story is started, like the others, to stampede voters. There is absolutely no truth in the story. There is not a candidate on the republican ticket who is not entirely loyal to the entire ticket. There has been no trading, and there will be none.

Look out for more lies—they will come, thick and fast, from now on.

Will Be Made to Answer In a Court of Law.

Prosecuting Attorney Nicholas and D. S. Payton will have C. L. Lorraine arrested on copies, and arraigned in court on a charge of malicious libel.

In the last issue of the Enterprise Lorraine attacks these gentlemen and makes charges against them that are false and clearly libelous.

The proceedings have been only waiting for the return of the Judge from another county. On his return papers will issue, and Mr. Lorraine will have an opportunity to prove his allegations.

This he cannot do.

It is quite true, what Judge Cahill said in his Ann Arbor speech that "all good citizens attend the primaries." It is only because there are so many who do not attend the primaries that the other thing he said is often true, that they "find that everything has been done by them"—things have been fixed." If they were at the primary to do it for themselves, it could not be done for them, could it? and nobody could "fix" it. But when they stay away, and neglect the duties of good citizenship, they are consenting accessories to whatever they then permit to be done, and are not good citizens; and your man Ferris, Mr. Cahill is by his own confession, just that kind of a man.

Petoskey Democrat: G. Von Platen and wife, of Boyne City, have just returned from the world's fair and will go to Petoskey shortly. Mr. Von Platen has disposed of his business interests in Boyne City, but has not yet determined where he will locate.

A Disqualified Witness.

An examination of the columns of the Scripps papers in Detroit gives abundant explanation of the fury zeal of those publications in behalf of unlimited state-wide primary reform—the wider the better. Their columns have for a month been decorated with the portraits of candidates for nomination at the primaries, and the pecuniary sentiment of their qualifications. That matter is paid for at high rates, and the revenue thus brought to the coffers of the publishers by this little Wayne county primary is something surprising.

The voting began Monday Oct. 17, and on the day before the News-Tribune contained 432 inches of those announcements. Adding to the measurements for the single week preceding, six inches of the Tribune and six of the News, with two of the Sunday News-Tribune, makes a total of 1,720 inches. A rate of $2.14 an inch has been made by one of the Detroit papers. The News rates are higher but at that average for the whole the amount that the Scripps interest would receive from this business, in addition to all their ordinary revenues, as the primary election contribution of eight days, is $3,680.8. Isn't it entirely reasonable that Mr. Scripps should be deeply interested in this "reform," and extremely zealous for its widest possible extension? What has share of the plunder would be now if the state and congressional and electoral tickets had been involved, with the candidates for all other counties and legislative districts where the papers circulate, may be suggested, but not imagined. For if Wayne county has 1,296 candidates, how many would the state and all the districts and all the counties have? Yes, indeed, wide open primary reform would be a bonanza for Mr. Scripps, and it can count on his undying support.

But the kind that leaves it the option of the counties and districts, and does not include the state ticket, can by the same token count on his undying hostility. That accounts for his extreme rancour towards the republican party. It stands in the way of a great addition to his already great wealth. But how about the other interests affected? If the Wayne county candidates have had to pay $3,680 to those two papers for only eight days, the amount for the other two dailies and all of the lesser papers in the county, and for the week preceding, should be at least twice as much more, or all together $10,950, and all this entirely new expense, in addition to the ordinary expenses of a campaign.

It is not necessary to speculate what it would cost in the mass for the whole state and all the papers. Surely, the public interests, demand, and the public will demand, a more adequate trial before launching the system upon the state; and on that proposition Mr. Scripps' interests disqualify him as a witness or a juror.

Bridge Matters.

The township board has signed up the total cost of repairing the bridges and find the amount to be $3,100. After deducting $425 for extra repairs, the balance is left for the transportation company to settle, which, we understand, they expect to do.

SCHOOL NOTES.

On the morning after Hallowe'en the high school sing "O Paradise, O Paradise, who doth not crave for rest." Mr. Howe also announced "vow for sale cheap—a rope to be given as a premium to the one who takes the cow."

The people who wanted to "wait and see" before getting their season tickets for the Lecture Course had a chance to see about one half the seats reserved on the first day the board was open at Fletcher's drug store. When the Charlevoix High School secures as fine a course as they have this year, it is pretty certain to be recognized "a good thing" by people who know. The six numbers cost an average of twenty-five cents each, and the reserved seat less than five cents for each.

Three rooms in the public schools have been temporarily closed on account of cases of scarlet fever among the pupils attending them. Other rooms will be promptly closed by the health officer if conditions make it necessary or advisable. In the meantime all children from affected families will not be allowed to attend until all danger has passed. People awake to the gravity of a possible epidemic usually after some members of the community have been criminally negligent in not reporting the first cases known.

Last Thursday evening the first evening meeting of the class in Public speaking was held in the commercial room. These meetings will hereafter alternate with the Lyceum programs once in two weeks on Wednesday evening. Only members of the class are allowed to attend. The evening sessions are mostly given to Parliamentary Practice under the direction of Mr. Howe. The class holds a business once each week on Friday, but no time could be found within the school program for the second meeting.

The debate on the comparative merits of foot-ball and basket ball at the "Opera House" last week was very stirring, and probably the best given in the school for a number of years. The string quartett and others furnished excellent music for the program. The attendance might have been considerably large. The proceeds amounted to $7.05.

—Look out for the Homage sale Saturday.

—Mrs. Libie Shanahan is in Manistee for a three weeks visit among friends.

—Emmet and Antrim counties both went republican on everything by good majorities.

—D. F. Mooch, R. A. Emery, and Libie Shanahan went north Tuesday morning for their annual deer hunt.

—Service will be held in the Episcopal Church on Tuesday Nov. 15th by rev. C. T. Stout. All are cordially invited.

—The ladies of the Baptist aid society will hold their annual Homemade sale beginning Saturday Nov. 19th. In Friend's old picture gallery.

—Mrs. J. W. Harris accompanied her husband to Detroit Tuesday, where they will spend the winter. Mr. Harris is engaged in civil engineer work for the Pere Marquette R. R. there.

—The Sea Foam, a 65 foot naptha launch was in here over Sunday, on her way from Duluth to Chicago. From there she is to take a party through the canals and the Mississippi to Florida.

—We do not believe in "cards of thanks." They are out of date, and unsuited for in a Christian community, but we are requested to convey the grateful thanks of Mrs. John Miller for sympathy extended in her recent bereavement.

—John Martin, the man who led the raid which broke up the Mormon colony under "King Strang" on Beaver Island, fifty years ago, was found dead on Portage Island, near Kewaunee, last week. He had lived a hermit life there for five years, and was 78 years of age.

—Mrs. Wagley, widow of the late Capt. John Wagley, and mother of Mrs. A. T. Bennett, of this place, died at her home in Cross Village one day last week. Deceased was one of the pioneers, and in the early days was widely known for her hospitality and kindly character. She has lived quietly at the old home since the death of her husband.

—Another peculiar situation in the local ranks. The nominees all supported Mr. Paddock and his "primary reform" ticket. This, standing by itself, means nothing, as they also supported Governor Bliss and voted for the lives of Roosevelt for R. But they supported Mr. Paddock and his ticket because of the Paddock saloon local law—a local measure. In their zeal for Paddock they helped to slaughter prosecutor Nicholas in Charlevoix precinct. If Nicholas is counted in there is trouble a-brest for certain proque. If money is considered, they may expect no favors, as that genie man is a socialist and prohibitionist, who says no man has a right to sell whisky to another man any hour in the twenty-four. With either one of those men for prosecutor, and a man for sheriff whom the saloons helped to slaughter in his own town, the outlook for them is not as rosy as it might be.

—Good for Beaver Island! For the first time in her history she goes republican—recording a majority of 14 for Roosevelt.

—Hugh Stacks has the grade all ready for the ties, on the cement factory branch. The ties and rails are expected here soon.

—Hon. A. B. Darragh, our member of Congress, was here Wednesday evening and part of Thursday, and passed the time quietly and very pleasantly among acquaintances.

—We are told that a certain distinguished gentleman says he has "purified politics" in Charlevoix county. In the light of local election history that is a joke of large proportions.

—Dave Burke, Walter Small, Rollie Lewis, Dell Stacks and Guy Crane, came home from college and voted for Roosevelt Tuesday. The beauty of it was that they were all "first voters."

Mrs. R. A. Emery gave a farewell tea party Monday evening to Miss Libie Emery and Miss Grace, about twenty ladies were present. Mrs. Emery and Miss Grace leave this week for Albion, where they will live this winter.

—The hardware store of H. Lee Jennings had a very narrow escape last Friday evening. Pouring a counter near the door was a pile of cans containing paints, varnish and japan-dac. A can of the latter exploded, breaking open several other cans and igniting them. For a moment it looked serious, but the clerks burned the stuff on the fire, and with the help of others the blaze was soon under control. The counter, and surrounding goods were considerably scorched.

—Elza J., relict of the late Louis Gesko, died at her home in this village Sunday night, aged 78 years. The funeral occurred Tuesday morning from the house. Deceased was one of the earliest pioneers of this section and participant in the late Mr. Dad Thompson, who came here before Mormon times. Her husband Louis Gesko was one of the victims of the Vernon disaster several years ago. Deceased was the mother of Mrs. Archie McNeill, of this place.

—The SENTINEL has no desire to "rub it in" on any defeated candidate, but it cannot forebear commenting on the strange circumstance of the republicanism and saloon people voting together on the county and legislative ticket. We might tell the good temperance people a few things along this line that would perhaps, be unpleasant. We will only say that their attitude was very inconsistent. This fact will reveal itself to them later. Another fact should cause Charlevoix to blush, is the threat in the short film that it gave Elmer W. Coulter. There was no just cause for this, and the mistake is all the more noticeable in the light of Boyne City's vote for Coulter's opponent—Hosch. When a man of the sterling worth of Mr. Coulter is turned down in his own town, it denotes that there is "something rotten in the State of Denmark." The injustice of this feature of the fight will become more and more apparent.

Central Lake Torch: Otto Salchow went to Traverse City Tuesday where he has accepted the position of superintendent of the South Side Lumber Co's new mill at East Jay.

A HOT FIRE.

A. T. Bennett & Co's Store Gutted by Fire Saturday Night.

One of the liveliest and hottest fires in the history of the town occurred at seven o'clock Saturday night, when the dry goods store of A. T. Bennett & Co. was completely destroyed by fire.

A. A. Barnett started below to renew the furnace fire. As the stairway he stopped to light a lantern. Scrutching a match for that purpose he had but just ascended the lantern when he heard a peculiar sound behind him. Turning about he saw that a pile of cotton batting was ablaze. A spark from the match had ignited it. With a bound he attempted to extinguish it, but without avail.

The entire back part of the store was in fire several seconds after the cries of alarm. Both Bennetts and Mrs. E. A. Barnett were driven from their store by the flames.

The fire went up the stairway like the blast of a volcano, and crept toward the Bridge street front rapidly.

In five minutes the north side hose company was on the ground and would have made it three minutes if the bridge had not been open for a passing vessel. The other company followed closely and four lines of hose were soon playing.

From the start the fire was a very stubborn one, owing to the fact that it was a brick veneered building. The building was shingled for five years before the fire was under control and broke out again at midnight necessitating a second alarm. It was quickly suppressed however.

Bennett's loss on goods will reach $4000, the stock being generally damaged to close out. Partially insured. The building was owned by C. F. Gerkens. The damage to the structure is estimated to be about $1,000. The brick veneer and wall frames being intact, be the roof destroyed. Mr. Gerkens will rebuild at once.

Too much cannot be said in praise of the fire department. The boys fought heroically. Wm. Knight, while inside the building in an effort to save goods, had his hands badly burned. Marshal Timon was considerably burned on his face, and in escaping from the front door closely followed by the flames, he fell and sprained his arm.

Petoskey Democrat: An important change in local hotel circles took place today whereby Mr. Frank Todd, of Charlevoix, assumes charge of and will manage the New Central hotel during the absence of Mr. Frank Hinson and family from the city during the winter. Mr. Todd is a hotel man of large experience and will conduct the house fully equal to its former management. Mr. Hinson and family will leave soon for southern Michigan, where they will visit relatives for some time and then go west or south, to spend the winter months.

IN THE TOILS.

C. L. Lorraine Arrested and Arraigned Out on Bail.

Urgens came too near the earth and precipitated a cataclasm!

Last Thursday morning early C. L. Lorraine, publisher of the East Jordan Enterprise, "might have been seen" wending his way to the court house. The purpose of this visit once was to record deeds transferring all his property to his daughter.

This being accomplished he was seen to move rapidly toward the railroad track. The sheriff, who already had a warrant for his arrest on the charge of criminal libel, immediately began a search for him, but the distinguished editor had disappeared. The sheriff proceeded to East Jordan on the noon boat and found his man, who had walked from Charlevoix that day.

He was brought here that afternoon, but they very considerately quartered him at a hotel instead of locking him up, as he was supposed to do. Friday morning he was arraigned in justice court. He entered a plea of not guilty and was admitted to bail, to appear for trial Nov. 28th.

His troubles will not end with this action, as Mr. Nicholas will later begin a civil suit for damages, and his property transfer will avail him nothing, as the courts have repeatedly held that property transfers to avoid responsibility are void.

In addition to this D. S. Payton will begin action against him for criminal libel as soon as the Nicholas case is disposed of.

For years C. L. Lorraine has conducted his paper on the plan of villifying and blackmailing. When he found it flying about the SENTINEL he turned its attention to the board of supervisors, and that body was charged with manifest and groundless, if not satisfied with this, he uncorked the vials of his venomous wrath against county officers. Even the sacred will rule, and now he finds himself in court to answer for his vicious wickedness.

Lorraine has sown the wind; he should reap the whirlwind. No man is proof against his dirty, scurrilous and Stupid ignorance, abnormal egotism and an unscrupulous nature have all combined to constitute in his person a character richly earning the contempt of all good people.

He deserves no sympathy.

Petoskey Democrat: A recent press dispatch from Cheboygan says it is no longer a state secret that the Pere Marquette railway is furnishing the funds with which to construct the railway from Pellston to that city and that simultaneous with the building of that road, the Pere Marquette will fill in the gap between Hay View and Pellston, thus making Cheboygan the northern terminus of the system. This is a perfectly logical thing for the Pere Marquette to do, because it would bring from one-half to two-thirds of the traffic of the Soo road, and would also remain permanently at Hay View, but would seen an outlet on the water, either at Cecil Bay, Mackinaw City or Cheboygan. The friendly relations which have long existed between the Pere Marquette and the Detroit and Mackinac had to the belief that both roads will use the same terminal, and moreover that a union depot will be constructed, which will be a credit to both lines and to the city as well.

A Story of Russian Power

CHAPTER XV.

A day time! better in Russia and at liberty to speak out and answer, Aye! Hoots, in a few minutes I saw "Peter the Limber" disappear on one of those high-shouldered brown dilaudas, continuing on the view of the feeble stamp of an Indiamman that goes at fifty discussions, not one of which he cares anthem-pin on one. A Russian prince is unmodestly a rare sight, in Hodge, but the rest know to alert enlisted. I forgot

"The Sparrowhawk" is one of the best streets that encircle the Czar' palace. "I turn into Isaac's Square, and I feel and pressed! and before I knew house that has a brown painted very dirty ears. NEW USE FOR SHORTHAND.

Pellocks and Hangers a Vehicle for Writers of Folk-Lore.

"Shorthand ought to offer a good plan for working out dialect stories," said the observant man, "and it occurs to me that a great many of the difficulties in the way of successful efforts along this line could be overcome in this method.

"Dialect writing is not an exact matter. In addition to the difficult task of giving the correct accent in the particular kind of dialect work we may seek to present there is the question of phonetics, which seems to me to be of some importance. Phonetic spelling is looked upon as a thing of marvelous simplicity.

"As a matter of fact, it is a most difficult thing when you come to try your hand at it. Suppose the next time you write a letter or story you attempt to observe the rule of phonetic spelling all the way through what you write. You will soon learn that what you thought was a shorter or more simple method will involve you in all kinds of trouble, and I dare say you will never come to see how to do the work as the old way would require.

"Dictating along this line has convinced me that shorthand could be used to immense advantage in dialect work. Why cannot some person of talent do this line work out a distinct shorthand in shorthand? Few writers can do it, but those who do know how much time and talk Dialect, but few can write it. The Dutch dialect is the one I know most about, so I am sure that a shorthand writer could do it. Dutch dialect is a thing of the past, so far as any one who knows it is concerned. Few people can write it, and it is a dialect that is well worth preserving. Dutch dialect is the dialect of the Pennsylvania Dutch

"WHOA" THE WORLD ROUND.

Word Is Universal Among Horsemen of All Nations.

"When I started on my trip around the world I intended," said a horseman, "to find out what was the word for 'whoa' in every language. I had a little book, and in it I intended to make a long list of the various words for 'whoa.'

"Do you know what I discovered? I discovered that 'whoa' is the word in all the languages. The Russian ships his horse with 'whoa,' the peasant ships his with 'whoa,' the Chinaman his with 'whoa,' and the Dutchman his with 'whoa.'

"And 'whoa,' I discovered, has been from the days of time the word to stop horses with. The Greeks and Romans used it in a slightly different form—'who.' The old English 'who war 'ee.'

"A philologist told me the other day that many of our 'animal words'—the words we order our animals about with—are as old as or older than 'whoa.' Take, for instance, 'co-boss.' The modern call to the cow. 'Co-boss' comes from the Sanscrit root 'go,' meaning to low. Another cow word, 'suh, suh,' which might be translated 'Please keep still,' comes from the Sanscrit 'soush,' meaning to stay motionless. And you know our chick, chick, chick—which calls chickens from their meals? Well, that comes directly down to us from the Sanscrit, 'Kok, a domestic fowl'—Louisville Courier-Journal.

MODERN WAYS IN JAPAN.

Western Customs Being Introduced and Assimilated.

If you but try to look at a tiny hand of any girl in a well-to-do family of present day Japan—a hand serving out of a scarlet lined sleeve—you will easily find a jewelled ring or rings on her fingers. Jewels we had none before, but we gets them just the same. As to the wearing of rings, even gentlemen are often seen with a thick gold ring made out of an old Japanese coin called 'koban.' The study of the introduction of a new custom is interesting.

In the case of "snow white pillows" they were first used in hospitals where we alleged everything from the wan as it was. We did not have sheets for our beds along with that, but Americans recommended itself to the Japanese, and the custom was readily followed by those who took a fancy to it.

As to kissing, it is rather delicate to touch on, but it cannot be dismissed with a general statement that "in all freedom and love the Japanese are wardly undemonstrative." All depends upon circumstances. Generally speaking, we shun the eyes of the public to be demonstrative, or to seek the occasion when all can note who we are. Kissing as practiced in the West is still strange to us, but no one who knows about it would wonder if a young couple of modern Japan should take to it to express their love.

How She Got Two Seats.

Two young women boarded a crowded north-bound Madison car Saturday evening. The taller of the two women was looking anxiously about for a seat when suddenly her pretty brightened up.

"Move up forward," she said to her companion, "and stop in front of the fat man."

They edged their way until they came to a big stout man occupying the space of two ordinary persons. Then the taller woman drew a long breath and said:

"Now Emily, I think I am going to faint."

The stout man looked alarmed and, rising quickly, said: "Why, you take my seat, madam."

Before the words were out of his mouth the two women had glided into the place he had vacated, and the taller woman whispered anxiously: "Wasn't it easy?"—New York Press.

Music Hath Charms.

A farmer chanced upon the pathetic story of a sick child, which he read with a gleam while its niece was playing to it on the piano, "Lead, Kindly Light." Some time ago there was some reporting in and came a man who shot himself while his wife was playing the piano.

Facts enhance suggest the varying effects that music has on different persons. People differ so much in temperament. The plaintive "Lead, Kindly Light," which invested the poor, disheartened man to kill himself, would only have caused a less sensitive man to leave the neighborhood. Music hasn't though it often causes concerts in fists and severe outbursts of resentment between neighbors, rarely causes death. Its effects show how differ some things are ordered. It is usually the innocent listener and not the offending player who is hurt.

Adjourned Supreme Court.

On news reached Mayor MacVeagh succeeded in adjourning the supreme court before the hole was bored. Mayor MacVeagh never remembered in Washington over night if he could help it, and on this occasion he actually decided to take the 4 o'clock train for Philadelphia. Although it was 3 o'clock, he kept his eye on the clock and at 4:45, giving himself just enough time to reach the station, he ceased his argument and said: "May it please your honors, I move that the court do now adjourn. I don't go to catch the 4 o'clock train for home." The majority of the judges seemed to navigate the justice, but the chief justice made the customary one-horse protest and Mr. MacVeagh got his train.

LANDSLIDE!

MAJORITIES ENORMOUS

Michigan Elects Warner Governor by Over 50,000 Majority.

Stroud Wins Out Nicely For Representative.

The country has endorsed the record and administration of Theodore Roosevelt by pluralities greater than those of any presidential candidate in the history of republic, and by a majority of the popular vote that appears at this writing to exceed that of any candidate since the foundation of the government.

President Roosevelt yesterday carried every northern and western state, most of them by enormous majorities. The returns early in the evening, especially from New York, were so greatly republican that before nine o'clock Judge Parker gave up the fight and telegraphed his congratulations to President Roosevelt. It was a veritable landslide for the republicans everywhere north and west.

Roosevelt carried New York by 200,000, electing Higgins (Rep.) governor by a safe majority.

West Virginia, which has been strenuously claimed by the democrats, gave Roosevelt 30,000 majority.

Illinois gives Roosevelt 175,000 plurality; Ohio went republican by 100,000.

Indiana endorses Roosevelt and Fairbanks by 20,000 plurality.

Minnesota broke its record by given Roosevelt 100,000 plurality.

Republican claim Missouri by from 20,000 to 30,000, but democrats elect Folk governor.

Michigan gave Roosevelt 200,000 majority, and elected Warner governor by over 50,000, with a solid republican congressional delegation and a safe republican legislative majority.

Roosevelt will have 343 electoral votes to Parker's 145.

CHARLEVOIX COUNTY.

Unofficial returns from all townships show that the republicans have carried the county on legislative and county ticket by from 385 for Stroud, representative, to 19 for Nicholas, prosecutor. While republicans are confident that they will hold this south majority for Nicholas there is an element of danger for Nicholas in the official canvas, in the possible existence of error in the unofficial returns. Yet the official count may continue the majority somewhat. Frankly speaking, it is too close for comfort.

As the National and State tickets, the county went republican by 1945 votes for Roosevelt and 927 for Warner.

The Boyne Falls Leader of last week says: "Melvin Miner, of Echo, who stole a telescope containing clothing to the value of about $25 from Pinnan & Hale's saloon was tried before a jury and convicted on a charge of petty larceny last Friday and sentenced to serve sixty days in the Detroit house of correction. Miner was turned over to Mr. Dormer, who was to take the prisoner as far as Charlevoix, there to be met by sheriff Pearson and taken from there to Detroit. While waiting for the train in Petoskey Dormer allowed the prisoner to give him the slip. His liberty was of short duration, however, Sheriff Pearson having recaptured him Saturday."

A Startling Test.

To save a life, Dr. T. G. Merritt, of Vic Mahomedan, Tex., made a startling test resulting in a wonderful cure. He writes, "A patient was attacked with violent hemorrhage, caused by ulceration of the stomach. I had often found Electric Bitters excellent for acute stomach and liver troubles so I prescribed them. The patient gained from the first, and was not half an attack in 14 months." Electric Bitters are positively guaranteed for Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Constipation and Kidney troubles. Only 50c at F. G. Hines & Co.

SCHOOL NOTES.

School work in Miss Bacon's room and in the Washington School has been resumed after a thorough fumigation by the Health Officer and the Director. No further danger from the scarlet fever is now feared.

Without interfering with the regular program a general election was held in the high school room on Tuesday afternoon. "Instruction Ballots" previously marked with the inspector's initials were individually supplied to each voter, who was given a place where his ballot could be marked in strict privacy. Five voters were at work at once during their vacant recitation periods, and the ballots after being properly folded were deposited in the district ballot box. After school the vote was carefully canvassed by the teachers with the following results.

Roosevelt 75, Parker 7.
Warner 36, Ferris 41.
Moffatt 78, McMullen 7.
Stroud 31, Paddock 51.
County officers (except surveyor) Republican 63-67.
County officers (except surveyor)—Primary Reform 17-28.
Robinson for surveyor had practically no opposition. The vote on state and county officers was so divided that it required fully two hours to summarize the results accurately. There were three national and one state Prohibition vote. Three of the four ballots that were cast out had no cross at the head of any ticket, and the fourth had a cross at the head of the Primary Reform ticket but no indication for national and state officers.

The election proved very instructive to the whole school, including the members of the County Normal Class. Such an exercise should enable quite a number of young men to handle a ballot intelligently at the next presidential election.

FINDS WATER IS LOST

MUCH IS PUMPED FOR WHICH CHICAGO GETS NO PAY.

One Million Gallons a Year So Into Stockyards Believed Lost While No Pay Is Made—Cruiser Makes Better Dom Contract Speed.

Now runs water in the out of the Chicago? Well, it depends a lot on the point of view. If you happen to be the city comptroller you may answer more than $300,000 this fiscal year, if you happen to be the man who pumps the water into the stockyards you may answer that it runs into the stockyards, if you happen to be the man who pays the water rent you may answer that it runs into the city treasury. If you happen to be the man who pays the water rent and who also owns the stockyards you may answer that it runs into the city treasury and into the stockyards. Thus it will be seen that the question of what becomes of the water in the Chicago drainage canal is one of considerable importance. Some one has pumped 1,000,000 gallons of water every hour for 365 days in the year into the stockyards for the last four consecutive years, and yet the city has paid for but one million gallons of water. Who has been using the other 999,000 gallons every hour? Who has been using the other 999,000 gallons every hour for four consecutive years? Who has been using the other 999,000 gallons every hour for four consecutive years and yet the city has paid for but one million gallons

ALL BIRDS ARE IMITATIVE.

Ornithologist Authority for Somewhat Remarkable Statement.

"The roar of the ostrich resembles the roar of the lion because the ostrich stole from the lion the sound, even as one sparrow steals from another a girl."

An ornithologist made that odd assertion in a taxidermist's shop. He went on to elaborate it as follows:

"Birds from the ostrich down are imitative. The catbird, where he lives alone, is silent, but in a country where lions abound he roars. Why? He causes his enemies admiring the majesty and grandeur of the lion's roar to gradually learned to roar himself. Hummer can do it too to see an ostrich throw back his little head and emit a roar like thunder.

"Mockingbirds imitate pigeons, and green Verdins imitate yellowhammers. They look their food in the winter months, or, and they cunningly steal each other's notes.

"The jay is an inimitable imitator. Some jays will imitate in their crows not only the whoooooo of the owls, the screams of the buzzard and the bleat of the owl but also the bleat of the lamb and the neigh of a horse.

"Even the nightingale imitates. In a nightingale's cordon song I have often heard the piercing screams of the woodwardie and the bubbuubbub of the anthrakh."—Washington Post.

Elephants as Lumber Drivers.

Any one who thinks the elephant a slow, clumsy beast would have caused to change his opinion on seeing him at work along the rivers of northern Asia.

The rainy season, which begins in April in the time when the bank logs are cut, and the city season in the forests around the upper waters of the Menam River are floated down to Bangkok, where their are reassembled and sorted by boatmen. Instead of "sidehills" upon these river drivers' sash to transfer the logs to their own owner's property by the sagacious use of the elephants and Kunawhee in Maine. The Siamese driving of the Menam rivers is done by barefooted, half-naked men on elephants and the "drive" ended and sorted out of the Lower Bay involved in the operation are done by the sagacious elephants.—Nicholas Cummings in Recalled.

Foreign Trade in Shoes.

We do not seem to be making as large an inroads in foreign trade as we have in years of 1899 and 1902, when the increase a year was over $100,000, but the general growth shows that our footwear is giving satisfaction and wanted abroad. The manufacturers have been faithful to their workmanship and have given goods up to merit. This will help that the styles have taken the lead of the leather trade.—Boston Commercial Bulletin.

His back on the plantation at Cuba was to weigh the cotton bales of the two cases is being sorted on camp house every night from the fields. He relied solely on his memory to find in record of hay sort, and then his report to the overseer every Saturday evening. He could tell the amount of cotton each one had picked for the six days in the week and was never known to make an error.

"The other case is told to an interesting article in the Publication of the Mississippi Historical Society. The Indian agent of the Indian government just after the treaty of Dancing Rabbit, had a census taken of certain Choctaw villages. The task was performed by a member of the tribe, who recorded the number of males, females, and children in each village. Some months later the records were burned and the Indian called in to make the tribal enrollment from memory from memory. There was not a single omission or error."

HELPED TO BUY ONE HEARSE

Vermont Family Had No Use of It and Refused Another Subscription.

In the old days in Vermont many of the towns were without hearses for carrying their dead from their earthly habitations to the burying ground. Therefore the good people were from house to house soliciting contributions for the purchase of a hearse. It was a difficult matter to raise the necessary $[illegible] but in the town of Hero it was finally accomplished. At once according to moral different farmers began hearse to take the hearse.

In the minutes of time the old hearse came to the end of its labors, when the sons whose it had carried to the little burying ground had come to the end of their needs. The committee was called upon a second canvass of the town and raised an old farmer who had contributed toward the first hearse and had before him the necessity of a second hearse. Old Graybeard consulted them earnestly and then said with determination:

"Me and my family don't never had no use of rather hearse, and I don't believe we ever will. I don't, and more."—Harper's.

Big Appetite of Mice.

Apropos of the war which is being waged against both mice in Japanese mess compartments have been given in that country to order that the depredations of these little outlaws might be noticed.

It has been calculated from experiments that each adult mice eats from five hundred of an ounce to one and one-half ounces of food daily, which means a consumption of from ninety to twenty-five pounds a year, according to the mice individuals. If we consider the fact that one mice can produce twenty-five young in a year, the quantity consumed by the quantity consumed, we have a somewhat formidable enemy to contend with.

Calculating on the supposition of a French newspaper, supposing the average consumption per mice to be one ounce a day, the total consumption for the Department of the Seine, the chief department of the Republic, would amount to the enormous number of nine billion six hundred and ninety million, or, in other words, the mice would consume twenty-five times the population of the department. Supposing the average consumption of mice to be half an ounce, the total would be four billion eight hundred and forty million, or, in other words, the mice would consume twenty-five times the population of the department. Making Paper in Tunis.

The new process of making silk paper, discovered by M. de Mas-Latrie, is now actually exploited near Bougon, Tunis, under the direction of Mr. Bouhy.

The new system is extremely cheap, the silk being restored to a pulp by a simple process of fermentation, which costs nothing.

As Tunisia and Algeria are the chief regions of silk production, the new discovery is expected to run the silk industry in both countries and make them for this source the first markets of the world.—New York Herald.

CHAPTER XVIII.

My friends became more and more steady during the operation, and I made the most of their presence, for I felt that I was safe. I ventured, then, to ask Ivan for a pipe.

I gave a name now as a strong protector and supporter, but with fear.

Then, as you can see, my—I—be—spoke.

An angry, fat officer he replied, yet he said it with the manner of one who is used to obedience and to obey, too, with a feeling of ease. "This is a bad job, if I shall be detained here long," he said. "Long now! Long enough! I'm not used to sleep in prison, Ivan—you know I am not."

I ventured, "Time is precious to me, sir, and I have a message to deliver."

"I suppose officers in uniform don't do such jobs as your pipe and your bundle—unknown to the officers."

"I suppose officers in uniform don't do such jobs as a man of honor would."

"No, no, no! Ivan, do you know who this is?"

"Yes, sir. Sent by the Czar's order."

"Sent by the Czar's order! Ivan, do you know who this is?"

"I do not, sir."

UPS AND DOWNS IN LIFE OF A GOLD MINER.

Ira Wetherbee, One of the Discoverers of Famous California Nugget, Struggles with Poverty at the Age of 79—Still Looking for "Pay Dirt."

Ira Wetherbee, 79 years of age, and famous among mining men as one of the discoverers of the second large gold nugget ever found in the Golden State, spent a part of last a month fortunes, by working night and day in the wilds of Trinity county in search of the yellow dirt. This old man, who was indeed with success in numerous of these ventures while either made or broke a character, became aware long ago of the uncertainties of worldly fortune. He now wants only what he needs, and insists he became a thing Wholesome to the man who of old earned dimes and spent eagles.

Wetherbee went to California from Massachusetts in 1854 at the age of 19. After two months of working for wages at $1 a day he began a quarter-fourth interest in a claim on the upper branch of Feather river. After three years of misery after which just under expenses for the four partners, about the first of the nineteenth year and fifty, the claim, where no water at work, a course one day. Industrially, Poor reformed work.

While working through the shifts they discovered that the rock was of a different character and size the gold. The ground on the farther where the claim was situated had been "shaken gravel," but the material in the vicinity was a mixture of broken red rock, clayey and red dirt, and the gold in lumps of an inch and less, and was unusual and gnarled.

Following this indication, they worked at the bottom of the mine and found "pay" dirt being deeper than the shaft, and in the end of the drift. They hired eleven men to work the new "pay" and they made from the "pocket" of the rocky claim about two years.

"One morning I walked up to Downtown, says Wetherbee, "and while sitting on the local saloon I noticed a friend all but two of the men coming up from the claim. Without a word to me they picked me up and carried me in, set me on the bar and forced the liquor for the crowd inviting me to drink with them, and they insisted on my pay the bill, which I cheerfully did. When finished of that round they insisted on the bill and where they for me through the same ordeal and so on. But I had learned to worship the customer of every saloon in town.

"After all this was over they took me back to the hotel and put me to bed. Well, here, now that you have pulled me all over town and you gamed and fed and sleeped me, I want to tell you what all this is about," said I.

"Out of those said 'We have found the mother of all nuggets together kind of a nugget, worth thirty.'

"'The devil you have!' said I. 'Then let me see it.'

"We went down to the claim and the most nugget in gold I ever saw. Its weight was 3 ounces in troy, and we took it to the saloon and had it weighed. Then we had some fun. We put the nugget in the center of the bar and we drinks all round with it. We gave drinks for the nugget and we drinks for the drinks. We had a lot of fun and we had a lot of drinks. Then we walked down to Marysville, and we had more fun and more drinks. Then we went to Sacramento, and we had more fun and more drinks. Then we went to San Francisco, and we had more fun and more drinks. Then we went to Stockton, and we had more fun and more drinks. Then we went back to Marysville, and we had more fun and more drinks. Then we went back to the claim

FAD FOR RICH LACE

FLOURISHED DURING THE REIGN OF LOUIS XIV.

Enormous Sums Spent by French Workers for the Production of Valenciennes Lace—Revolution Put an End to the Industry.

During the reign of Louis XIV. of France when the gorgeous dressing of both men and women was at its height, the art of rare lace-making was at its zenith in France. The linen thread of the French court spent an large sums on elaborately ruffles and jabots, and it was not unusual for some exalted courtier ruffles of valuable lace to sell for nine shillings an ell. Madame de Barry is said to have spent a small fortune on the lace which was popular not only for its beauty but its warming qualities.

Valenciennes lace was originally developed from the lace factory at Lucquesse, which in turn had learned its art from the Spanish Mills. Francois Duflos, in 1656, who had a class of young girls in Valenciennes at that time, and later established several centers in Flanders where it became a national industry.

Valenciennes lace shows no Flemish beauty, since falls in the direction of right, by the frequent use of rattles, crosses and variations, which add little and with in Flemish laces. Varieties of this lace were called "grove lace" in that the groundwork stands out clearly from the pattern and again back into the pattern as only the worker. This makes the work very complicated and very laborious.

But during the French revolution the art of Valenciennes lace making came near being permanently lost. The disappearance of sleeve ruffles had a great deal to do with this and the fashion of the day of Francis were in no position to purchase such expensive lace from Valenciennes they turned to cheaper laces from Italy and Spain. The little manufacturers somehow drew or four ells a day from each worker, whereas a Valenciennes worker could scarce to draw two an inch and a half a day. Moreover the lace was less durable, and its lustre made reasonable but the strong competition at least, it quite superseded Valenciennes.

Thus, during the upheaval in France politics the Valenciennes workers fled to Belgium, where they settled in Ghent, Ypres, Brussels and neighboring cities, each of which in turn became famous for some variation in the varieties in their work, although Ypres produced the best quality. There the Duke of Brabant made an honorary member of the guild.

Napoleon I. and Napoleon III. both attempted to restore the ancient industry to France, but without success. In time there were barely 20 Valenciennes lace in the town, although the Malines and Alencon industries were revived. By 1851 only two women lace makers remained at work in Valenciennes, and now the original Valenciennes lace is only seen in museums or in the collection of some seeker of antiquities.

Waterman's Complicated Task.

A watchman who has been engaged by the directors of an Australian bank had brought with him good recommendations. The chairman of the board sent for him and proceeded to "put him up" as to his duties.

"Well, ahem," he began, "this is your first job of this kind, isn't it?"

"Yes, sir."

"Your duty must be to exercise vigilance."

"Yes, sir."

"No stranger must be allowed to enter the bank at night under any pretext whatever."

"No, sir."

"And our manager—he is a good man, honest and trustworthy, but I will be your duty to keep your eye on him."

"But it will be hard to watch two men and the bank at the same time."

"Two men! How?"

"Why, sir, it was only yesterday that the manager called me in for a talk, and he said you were one of the best men in the city, but it would be just as well to keep both eyes on you, and let the directors know if you hung about after hours."—London Answers.

Didn't Know About Cassar.

Miss Marie Manning, the author, tells the history of her recent European trip. The novelist was seeing Rome for the first time, and in the manner of her sightseeing was anxious to translate a date to the tomb of Caesar. Meeting a citizen on the street, she inquired in her best Italian, the location of the tomb.

The man looked greatly embarrassed.

"I am desolated, Signorina," he apologized, speaking in excellent English. "I do not know. Caesar Lo sarto dolce so long!"—Harper's Weekly.

No Chance for Him.

Ambassador Choate at a recent reception in London was approached by a British society swell, who said:

"Now, look pointed, Mr. Choate, but I'm told that many Americans are gentlemen. Now, will you be good enough to tell me just what is a gentleman?"

"As I understand it," gravely replied Mr. Choate, "a gentle is a man who, when he accidentally sees a thing, can make his hearers believe it was intentional."

"Now, really! Then there's no chance of my ever being taken for a gentlem. Don't you know?"—New York Times.

Glimpse of Henrik Ibsen.

An American visitor, Christiania, Norway, gives this sketch of Henrik Ibsen: "We were driving past the house of the great man, when our guide casually remarked, as if it had not occurred to him, 'sometimes people see them at that window.' We looked up quick as a flash. There we saw the well countenance, shaded features and white whiskers, looking like a ghost face against the window sash."

WEARY WILLIE HERO

STORY OF HIS BRAVERY AS TOLD BY HIMSELF.

Rare Presence of Mind and a Wooden Leg a Combination That Saved Train from Destruction—Usual Irregular Fashion Followed.

"The other evening I was wendin my way wearily along a railway in that State which is noted for the quality of its pasture," said Weary Willie. Rhodes the one-legged gentleman of the Amalgamated Association of Hobos. "Thinkin of the subject, I lies down in the embankment of the road, I sat me down to rest. I had been greatly worried earlier in the day by a farmer who I had stopped at her kitchen door to asked for sustenance.

"'Here, you road wan,' she says, 'Are some strawberries, they have worked a little, but not enough to hurt you.'

Kind lady, says I, you grieve me deeply. Just think I would take into my mortal stomach edibles to kill? 'Then scatterlike,' she says in a short and tree sentence. In my top head days I was taught the value of short sentences, so I gave order I appreciate you more. Thirty days, I think should to the limit, unless the winter is cold. I may be an other victim place for rest. In this same I have the courage of the unfortunate, have been convicted four times.

I was soon stretched as I was along the railway in my wonted, log behind be ones a lie, if I had not turned my sixteen teeth in the synch is not tired to make a first class of beefs. I mean, I wouldn't be here.

Even you can see, stranger, by my majestic bounder carriage that I have been used to better things. Yes, I used to be a knight of the engine, opera chorus an even once I pose for statuary. But I can't get the glitch.

As I sat there in the dumps away off in the distance I could hear the rumble of an approaching express, rocks rolled with the weight of human freight. Should I cast my wooden carcass under the cruel wheels? I did it not!

I exert industry at the rail is fine of the end I was horrified to see that one end of the fish plate connecting it with the next rail was broken. Makin a hasty examination, I found that one of the bolts between the fish plate in the rail had loosened in' fallen out, leavin a bad connection at the joint.

What was I to do? The express engine would be thrown from the tracks to darkness pieces. I waved my hands frantically in the air, but no response from the engineer of the fiery train. I tore me hair. Further that extremity put the humble trick to work on the fresh tack, for I got a quick idea. Lackin irons on the green at right angles with the track, I wrench the ferrule out of one wooden leg through the hole in the rail joint plate, in this takin the place of the absent bolt hold the rail firmly in position. In the fittin' express dashed even in safety, I thought, thought that the wind from the rush of the train blew under the wheels.

The engineer, seein me lyin there, thought he'd jump over a pass by stopped his train.

Maybe the passengers didn't hand me the festive digits when they found out what I'd done. It was just like gettin money for fond parents.

"An' now Clarin, as the Governor of South Carolina, said to the Governor of South Carolina, this avid listeny is a discourse. Thank Gaplin, I talk very much."—New York Sun.

Organists Long Lived.

Organists are peculiarly long lived, though doubtless the oldest organist is Mr. Gervase Cooper, an English musician. He is more than thirty years old, but still does active service as organist of a Wolverhampton church. He has been associated with the musical services of that denomination for seventy-five years, and for fifty-eight years has officiated as organist continuously. Another notable instance is that of Mr. T. N. Webber, who played the national anthem at Westminster when Queen Victoria was crowned, and did the same at the coronation of King Edward. He has been organist at the parish church for sixty-four years.

Nation's Bill for Beds Waste.

The beds waste season is closing. A simple statement, but few know all that it means, or the great economical feature the beds water season. In the United States alone 75,000 merchants sell beds water, averaging sales of $120 a year, or a total of $15,750,000 per annum. The average price of drinks is 5 cents, giving the number of drinks as 315,000,000. Could the glasses required to serve these beds drinks be placed side by side they would reach to within a day's travel of once around the world.

Hearing Amid Clatter of Machinery.

"People who have worked years in mills and shops develop a peculiarity of hearing that a physician recently marked the manager of a big manufacturing establishment.

"They are deaf at home and wonderfully acute at hearing in the workroom. In a quiet place, where the ordinary tones of voice is common and distinct, above all other sounds they seem to be almost yelled at by ordinary conversing well than, and yet in the die of a mill they can carry on a conversation where the average person could not hear a stone. Often a visitor comes here to a friend at work, and while the visitor half the time is unable to hear his own remarks when the racket the worker catches the words without difficulty. Yet the two were in a room away off in the mill it would be the mill employes who would have trouble going about with the conversation, unless loud speech was resorted to. Years from the clatter of machinery in which his ears have been accustomed for years, he has kept in more or less deaf, but in the midst of the Tumbs he seems of hearing is very keen. It's odd, but it's a fact.

Blessbirds at Prayer.

Here is the latest from the Parkhurst correspondent: "For the last one years millions of blessbirds have annually gathered in a cedar swamp near Ocala.

"I was in the swamp last week, perching a lodge house, and make a discovery. They were holding campmeetings, the row of stock, firebrands lighted birds on the top of the tallest tree I think were ministers, and as I watched one of them spread his wings and talked in low, earnest tones, and the multitude bowed their heads.

"Then he said something to them in blackbird and all the birds in one tree began to sing and several in the south spare also joined in. The services then broke and were conducted by an old bird with part of his tail gone. There was some flirtin and tittering going on in the back rows, but most of the audience were quiet. It looked to me as though many of the birds were asleep.

"When the meeting closed, every bird began to talk, and each chirp made I never heard before. Then they flew away to a field of grain and destroyed an acre in ten minutes"—Kennebec Journal.

Verses on His Dog.

"No, sir," said the struggling poet, "editors do not give a fellow any encouragement. One day last week I waited two hours to see the editor of a leading magazine. I told him I had written some verses on my dog.

"He asked me what part of the dog I had used, and I told him I gave my dog far away he would run up and look at it.

"I explained that I had the verses with me, and handed them to him with the remark that I had just dashed them off.

"He quickly glanced over them, and handed them back, telling me I didn't quite rise off far enough."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Loving Epitaph.

Timothy L. Woodcraft, in illustrating a point which he wished to make at a recent political gathering, told of an epitaph which he had seen on a tombstone in a graveyard in the Shenandoah Valley. The epitaph read:

"Here lies a wife. Texas cannot bring her back. Therefore her tear bard weeps."—New York Times.

FIRE IN JERSEY CITY.

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY THOUSAND LOSS IN STOCKYARDS.

Four Hundred Cattle, Sheep and Hogs Perish in Flames—Three Persons Said Mortally Hurt—Death of Barn Fire in Wisconsin.

A remarkable spectacle presented itself to city officials when a conflagration which burned fiercely for several hours, and some hundred sheep, hogs and cattle were burned to death in the stockyards of the Pennsylvania Railroad in Jersey City, N. J., on the night of Nov. 3. The stockyards covered 10 acres. The fire was said to be the most destructive that ever occurred in Hudson county. The stockyards were owned by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company and were located on the Hackensack meadows. The fire was discovered at 11 o'clock by a watchman who was making his rounds in the stockyards. The alarm was sounded and the fire department responded with all the apparatus in service. The flames had spread with such rapidity that the watchman had barely time to escape from the yard, and a strong wind blowing at the time made it impossible for the firemen to get near the burning pens. The fire was finally confined to the stockyards, but not before the flames had spread to the Erie railroad yards, where a number of freight cars were burned. The Erie yards are located just south of the stockyards. The loss will be about $150,000, of which the Pennsylvania Railroad will probably be the heaviest sufferer. The Erie loss will be about $10,000. The Pennsylvania Railroad has a contract with the Hackensack Meadows Improvement Commission by which it is obliged to keep the stockyards in repair. The fire was the most destructive that ever occurred in Hudson county. The stockyards were located on the Hackensack meadows, and some hundred sheep, hogs and cattle were burned to death. The flames spread to the Erie railroad yards and

THE SUGAR FACTORY.

It Is Not Dead, But in a Condition of Syncope From Too Large a Dose of Hope.

Public opinion seems to have crystallized into a settled conviction that the Charlevoix Sugar Factory stands on Pine Lake merely as a big concrete monument of irresponsible financial adventure, that it only requires a graven inscription "sacred to the memory of——" to make it the sole solecism of lost hope.

This is quite natural, from the sorrowful experience we have had with the big ventures, but it is a mistaken idea. Its condition is Dame-full—not hopeless.

The truth may as well be told; it is suffering from an overdose of hope, and must shake off the effects of the poison before it can hope for vigorous health. It is receiving a process of vigorous and effective treatment that will certainly bring about the desired results.

It is well known that the suspension of work, and the consequent failure to operate was the result of trouble between the Charlevoix Sugar Co. and the National Construction Co.—which is H. H. Dame. The early winter of 1903 was a factor in the trouble, by reason of the large acreage of beets on leased land being snowed under, but no much blame has been at the bottom of all the trouble.

Following the collapse of 1903, came the inevitable lines and levies, and subsequent conditions shaped themselves into legal issue between the two corporations for possession. Meanwhile the Construction Co.—which is Dame—went into the hands of a receiver. Today the situation is simply the same as it was last spring—waiting for the cure of Dameism—for the elimination of Dame from any power or influence in the concern.

There is located up on the banks of Pine Lake a practically completed sugar plant, representing an outlay of approximately $250,000. The controlling stockholders in the venture are three wealthy gentlemen, any one of whom is able to swing the whole outfit. They do not propose to lose what they have invested, and to prevent such a contingency they are permitting it to pass through legal process of adjustment. When this process is ended, as it must, in the certain and resistless operation of law, and the bright, harmless sun of H. H. Dame is extinguished, ownership and title will be settled and the plant will come out of its deep, Dame-fat sleep and cut beets.

Nothing is more certain than this. The plant is there, and it will be owned by somebody. Messrs. Martling, Lewis and Henderson are not men who are accustomed to being cut-footed. There is a jack pot up and Dame's chips are all in.

The local superintendent, Mr. S. A. Marting, is very serious, probably under instruction, but that there must be a show down soon is certain. And it is just as certain that when the time comes, all claims will be paid and the plant be put on a solid financial basis. In the natural order of things it must be so.

Hooker Fired.

Henry Hooker associated with Capt. Tims, Honnor as one of the local inspectors of steam vessels in this district, has been dismissed from the service in the general shake up. The charges against Hooker was irregularity in office.

The Boston Store buys clothing of these great people exclusively for the past two seasons, every one of these garments are strictly guaranteed, as the manufacturer said they make it $10.00 and from that up as high as $20.00 in an interview with Mr. Meyer Cohen, proprietor of the Boston Store he says "We have gone in very heavy in clothing for the coming spring and summer season, we will get these goods in early about March 15, 1905, and have them on sale by our clothing customers in March 17, for spring and summer wear. We purchased about a $1000 stock of clothing for the coming summer season, and I will forfeit $100 to any person all that is better line or clothing or a close line in Charlevoix county. This is rather a strong statement to make, but I can back it. If any well dressers is in need of a whole suit. Coat should be guaranteed to him, he better call on us. We have a big stock of Cohen Frankz clothing in stock, they are beauties too."

AT EAST JORDAN

Death of Two People Under Horrible Circumstances.

From East Jordan comes the news of the most terrible tragedy of its kind in the history of Charlevoix county.

The two young daughters of Robert Buchanie were at a neighbors house Sunday afternoon, and on the way home accepted a ride with Merritt Moore, a young farmer twenty four years old.

On the way the team became frightened and ran away. One of the girls jumped safely but the wagon was overturned on the other one, killing her instantly, her body being terribly mangled.

After young Moore had secured his team he took them home and put them in the barn. He immediately went to the house, and getting his revolver went into the woods and shot himself dead.

Friends at East Jordan think that he considered himself to blame for the girl's death. All of the parties were respected people of Wilson Township, near East Jordan.

The girl was fifteen years of age.

The Weather as Prognosticator.

Prospects are bright for a very warm market in the matter of the Nicholas-Jersey recount.

The board of canvassers recommenced Tuesday morning, with the supervisors of six townships present with their ballot boxes as a part of their baggage.

The session opened up Tuesday afternoon with Nicholas at the bat, and D. H. Hitch as assistant.

Mr. Jersey appeared with Edwin S. Pratt, of Traverse City, as attorney. The afternoon was devoted to arguments on legal questions bearing on the case. As we go to press both of the contestants have reached the long at first base.

The recount will occupy all this week, and will probably bring up in supreme court.

A Poaching Conspiracy!

A committee representing the Petoskey board of trade has been conferring with Pere Marquette officials in an effort to secure a train from the south on that road which will give the people an opportunity to trade in Petoskey, talking advantage of a rate rebate scheme which the board of trade of that city has worked out. The scheme provides for the sending of circulars monthly to a regular mailing list of the homes within a radius of 30 miles of Petoskey. With each circular setting forth the advantages of trading in Petoskey is enclosed a certificate bearing the name and address of the party. When anything is bought the amount of the purchase is endorsed on the back of the certificate by each merchant from whom a purchase is made. Any merchant will redeem the certificate by paying the holder his railroad fare, according to the grand total, on a basis ranging from 10 miles or less for a 25 per cent purchase to 60 to 50 miles on a purchase amounting to $47.50. The expense of the rebate is divided among the merchants according to the amount taken in by each. The coupons are cleared through the secretary of the board of trade.—Grand Rapids Herald special.

Aha! We thought this was the scent of the conspiracy! And now, the question arises, shall Charlevoix business men permit this well-laid plan to succeed?

As a matter of fact, there is something very seductive, and yet much that is deceptive in these "rebate offers." We will wager a big red apple that any person who permits himself to be decoyed into this trap will always be the loser in the end.

It pays to stand by your own town and your own merchants. If your local market is not what it should be, you certainly make it no better by going away from it to spend your money, and you may, by united loyalty to make it better. This "rebate" business is a snare and a fraud. The dealer who gives it intends to make it back before he gets through with you, and he will do it every time, and then laugh at you for a sucker. Stand by your own town if you want it to prosper and build itself up as a market for your products.

It is fortunate it is to be forewarned. The business men of Charlevoix have a duty to perform in the premises, will they do it?

"The Rogue Man is Coming, He Will Catch You if You Don't Watch Out"

It has been known for some time that special government inspectors were abroad on the lakes, looking up irregularities and delinquencies. The terrible Stevens disaster is the result of it, and stringent orders have been issued to bear down hard on any shortcomings.

The first action to affect Charlevoix occurred this week in Chicago, when the big-boat man went after the steamship Pilgrim. Capt. Richardson was ordered to lower his leaks. There being some defects in the boat lackin that prevented prompt compliance, Capt. Richardson's license was suspended.

Capt. Wm. Franklin, late of the Kansas, is appointed to the command of the Illinois.

NORTHERN MICHIGAN.

Traverse City has twelve cases of small pox.

Physicians of Traverse City have formed an agreement to close their offices every night in the week at 8 o'clock. After that hour only cases known as "emergency work" will be accepted. Every doctor in the city is in the agreement.

Traverse City Record: Contractor John Monroe and a crew of five men left for Boyne City this morning after completing the work on the city dock line contract. They will immediately begin work on building a railroad bridge and dock for the Boyne City Lumber company on Pine Lake.

East Jordan Herald: A change to a place in the management of the East Jordan Harrison Co., yesterday when W. J. Smith sold his share in the stock to H. S. Ottis, brother of George Ottis—the other member of the firm. Mr. Smith will continue with the firm.

Petoskey News. By far the largest deer that has been shipped into the city this season, is a big buck, that was shot by W. S. Menick in the northern part of the Upper Peninsula. The buck weighed over 250 pounds and was the possessor of as fine a pair of horns as has been seen in the city.

Alvah Mausell, a log sawyer living with his parents two miles south of Mackinaw, failed to come home Saturday night. Inquiry of his partner revealed the fact that he was not working Saturday afternoon; Sunday morning a search was commenced and about noon his body was found in the woods with a part of his head blown off, a few rods from where he was last seen.

Petoskey News: During the meeting of the Grand Traverse Ministerial Association in this city this week resolutions were passed very highly endorsing the work of Dr. Ira Marrel, presiding elder in the district. This is his last year in this district and since his coming force has brought the district up to the front rank. One of the most noticeable parts of his work was the bringing of so many fine young men into the pulpits of the district.

East Jordan Enterprise: John A. Stevens, formerly one of the leading citizens of this place but for upwards of ten years a resident and in business at Central Lake, died at that place on Saturday Nov. 5th after a long illness. At Central Lake he was the senior member of the firm of stevens & stevens graphs, and of the Central Lake Exchange Bank, which also does considerable business in the vicinity of East Jordan. The funeral was held the following Monday under the auspices of the F. & A. M. the sermon being by Rev. Williams, an old time friend. He was 77 years of age and highly respected.

—The Journal one week since what has not been done in the past twenty years by any paper publishing the proceedings of the board of supervisors for two months, all in one issue. Lake Shore, some Chicago has been selected as the site for the naval training station, and the nice, pretty talk Charlevoix gave these nasty fellows was all wasted. No doubt they knew it all the time. But we had a little rub at the government abstract, anyway and a colored gentleman to pass the gravy.

—The steamhanger Altoona, of which we spoke last week as having arrived with broken wheel and stern bearings left under her only steam Sunday night for Buffalo. The captain expected to be compelled to tow down, but diver Archie Bennyah, in three days, succeeded in fixing up the stern bearings and breaking a frozen off the wheel, opposite the one already broken.

—Leaping special. Fifty-five little girls at a bearing today on the request of the Wolverine Fish Co., of Bellaire, to which he confessed to the use of the same in his business. I felt the chester of A. Booth & Co., of Chicago, on the grounds that lines have brought up all of the wholesale fish houses in Michigan, and that their business is being conducted in violation of the anti-trust law. Booth & Co. deny the charge and claim that the court has repeatedly held that it is not violating the anti-trust laws.

—Probably the largest deer, in tonnage, ever assembled in Charlevoix was shot and brought to town Sunday. Besides the same Spalding, which was the only unlucky vessel, there were the steamhangers Albert Sopher, Hawthorne, Three Brothers, Alcona and Pine Lake, and the two barges Tilden, Minch, Blaine and Hansen. Three vessels were dismantled and carried a total of something over 5,000,000 feet from Pine Lake ports mainly. Besides this, the schooner Ellen Williams left here with 14,000 bushels of potatoes on board. The entire fleet left Lake Sunday at midnight.

—Potato dear is becoming one of our necessary products since the manufacture of sausage, crackers, biscuit and similar goods have found out its value in the preparation of this produce. There is only one plant in the country where it is manufactured and the one is owned with with orders it cannot fill. Its capacity is 2,000 bushels of potatoes in twenty four hours. If this industry can be handled profitably anywhere it could be here in the midst of one of the best potato regions in the country, and that it is profitable has already been shown. Even potato raised from the size of a thickey nut up can be used in making this flour and as the demand for it is greater than the supply and steadily increasing, a market for the manufactured article is already assured.

The Recount.

The recount on Tuesday came to an end Friday, the work closely showing the election of A. H. Nicholas.

Errors that were corrected by Mr. Jersey and his counsel, Mr. Pratt, gave Nicholas the majority in three townships. Mr. Jersey thereupon withdrew his demand and conceded Nicholas' election.

A member of the board says a recount of all the townships would have given every man on the ticket a corresponding increase.

Manistee Herald: Z. W. Zapp has sold his entire interests in the lumber business at this place to H. W. Wilson. The business will be continued by Mr. Wilson and Mr. Zapp will devote his time to the affairs of the Superior Lime Co., in which he is now interest.

Who Has Spoiling Joint.

A letter from Capt. Ira Morehouse states that the schooners Chas. Listing recently went ashore outside the pier at Saugatuck, Mich., one at a time. Capt. Morehouse says:

"I took some silver tipers for the breakwater lights, and did not discover the mistake until it was too late. We had part of a load of coal, and after she struck she filled with water in an hour. It was a bad beach. She is almost twenty miles from the nearest land. I sold the wreck for just enough to pay the crew and get home."

The Listing was chartered by Cook, Morrison & Co., of this place.—Capt. Morehouse owning a small interest. She was built last year, 121 feet beam and 25.5 beam. She was built in 1877 at Manitowoc, Wis.

Capt. Morehouse took her to the ocean several years ago, and has run her in the coasting trade between Maine, New York and Massachusetts ports.

SCHOOL NOTES.

The following is a complete list of all the contributions received from the various grades of the Charlevoix Schools last Wednesday afternoon. These from the Washington and Lincoln schools were brought in a wagon to the McKinley building by Geo. Dunker, and the whole collection was taken free of charge to the steamer Bluecoat on Thursday morning by Mr. Eaglston. The various items are condensed as follows:

7 bushels of potatoes, 3 of a piece, 14 of turnips, and 14 of turnips and parsnips. 1 peck of winter radishes, 1 of onions, and one of beets, 40 heads of cabbage, 11 squashes, and 9 pumpkins, 8 quarts of nuts, 25 of canned fruits and jellies, 5 of corn, 2 of catsup, 1 of cranberries, and 1 pint of condensed milk, 8 pounds of sugar, 12 of flour, 3 of peas, 2 of rice, 5 of bread fair loaves, 1 of cornstarch, 5 of mix was all seated. No doubt they knew it all the time. But we had a little rub at the government abstract, anyway and a colored gentleman to pass the gravy.

Besides the same Spalding, which was the only unlucky vessel, there were the steamhangers Albert Sopher, Hawthorne, Three Brothers, Alcona and Pine Lake, and the two barges Tilden, Minch, Blaine and Hansen. Three vessels were dismantled and carried a total of something over 5,000,000 feet from Pine Lake ports mainly. Besides this, the schooner Ellen Williams left here with 14,000 bushels of potatoes on board. The entire fleet left Lake Sunday at midnight.

—Potato dear is becoming one of our necessary products since the manufacture of sausage, crackers, biscuit and similar goods have found out its value in the preparation of this produce. There is only one plant in the country where it is manufactured and the one is owned with with orders it cannot fill. Its capacity is 2,000 bushels of potatoes in twenty four hours. If this industry can be handled profitably anywhere it could be here in the midst of one of the best potato regions in the country, and that it is profitable has already been shown. Even potato raised from the size of a thickey nut up can be used in making this flour and as the demand for it is greater than the supply and steadily increasing, a market for the manufactured article is already assured.

The Recount.

The recount on Tuesday came to an end Friday, the work closely showing the election of A. H. Nicholas.

Errors that were corrected by Mr. Jersey and his counsel, Mr. Pratt, gave Nicholas the majority in three townships. Mr. Jersey thereupon withdrew his demand and conceded Nicholas' election.

A member of the board says a recount of all the townships would have given every man on the ticket a corresponding increase.

The Northern Michigan Teachers' Association.

The meeting of the State teachers' Association of Northern Michigan on Nov. 25 and 26, at Traverse City, was one of the most interesting held in recent years. The discussions were unusually lively and vigorous, especially those participated in by Supt. Baker of Manistee. The address of Prof. Wade of the new Western Michigan Normal School, on "Professional Improvement," and those of Dr. Lomaster the new president of Olivet College, on "Child Study" and "Education," were especially valuable and helpful. By vote of the association the annual membership fee was doubled, and the next annual meeting will be held at Manistee. Supt Hoss as usual led the "congregational singing" during the convention and was instrumental in calling a meeting of all the county normal teachers present for the purpose of organizing a systematic course of intercommunication between these schools. Commissioner Jesse Louise Greely, of Kalkaska, who has attended every meeting of the association since its organization and who has served the last two years as secretary and treasurer was elected president for the coming year.

A letter from Capt. Ira Morehouse states that the schooners Chas. Listing recently went ashore outside the pier at Saugatuck, Mich., one at a time. Capt. Morehouse says:

"I took some silver tipers for the breakwater lights, and did not discover the mistake until it was too late. We had part of a load of coal, and after she struck she filled with water in an hour. It was a bad beach. She is almost twenty miles from the nearest land. I sold the wreck for just enough to pay the crew and get home."

The Listing was chartered by Cook, Morrison & Co., of this place.—Capt. Morehouse owning a small interest. She was built last year, 121 feet beam and 25.5 beam. She was built in 1877 at Manitowoc, Wis.

Capt. Morehouse took her to the ocean several years ago, and has run her in the coasting trade between Maine, New York and Massachusetts ports.

The Canal News.

The members of the high school with broken wheel and stern bearings left under her only steam Sunday night for Buffalo. The captain expected to be compelled to tow down, but diver Archie Bennyah, in three days, succeeded in fixing up the stern bearings and breaking a frozen off the wheel, opposite the one already broken.

I felt the chester of A. Booth & Co. deny the charge and claim that the court has repeatedly held that it is not violating the anti-trust laws.

Report of special committee to visit Poor House

To the Honorable Board of Supervisors

GENTLEMEN—Your committee on County Farm would respectfully submit the following report: We did on the 21st day of March, visit the Farm and found the house clean, comfortable and well kept, with 12 inmates. With the exception of Capt Bennett, the inmates of the county house said to your committee that they were all well fed and cared for, and that the complaint uttered by Gus Dennison was entirely false and unfounded fact. On the farm at this time were 3 horses, 2 colts, 6 cows, and six other cattle all in good condition and with plenty of feed. Mr. Kemp reported to us that the farm would have for sale this spring about 200 bushels of oats 400 bushels of corn and 100 bushels of potatoes and that he had 11 acres of wheat sown—all of which is respectfully submitted.

J H Graff, D S Payton, Geo W Bailey

On motion of J. L. Price above report was accepted and adopted

The following motion was introduced by J H Graff, supported by H Wagner That the county clerk be instructed to instruct the county surveyor to meet with the Com. of Highways of the various townships in the county through which the United States mail routes are located and cause a report to be made and filed with said clerk on or before Oct. 1st 1904 setting forth by description of the land those fences or parts of fences which could cause the formation of snow drifts along said mail routes and that said report be made in conformation with sec. 7 of Local Act No. 321 of the year 1903

PRESIDENT AT THE FAIR.

Republicans and Party Vice the Big Exposition in a Day.

President's day at the Louisiana Purchase exposition passed with more ease and a little less rain than marked the opening day of the exposition a week before. As the autocrat of all the Russias was not officially greeted by the exposition management, the day was devoted to a visit to the exposition by the president of the United States. The visit was made in response to special request from the management of the exposition, and was in the nature of a compliment to the president, and he was accompanied by a party of friends who had come to St. Louis to take part in the celebration of the day set apart for the honor of the president. The day was ushered in by a salute of 21 guns, and the weather was ideal for the occasion. The rain which had fallen in the morning had laid the dust and left the air cool and invigorating, and the sun came out in all its glory to add its share to the occasion. The president and his party were met at the station by the exposition officials headed by President Francis, who had with him a special escort of honor, consisting of a troop of cavalry and a battalion of infantry, and they were escorted to the Louisiana Purchase building, where the president was formally welcomed by President Francis, who made the address of welcome, to which the president responded in a few well-chosen words. The president and his party then visited the Philippine exhibit, the Japanese exhibit, the Russian exhibit, the Chinese exhibit and the Cuban exhibit, and then visited the Government building, where they were received by the commissioner of the Philippines, Dean C. Worcester, who had charge of the Philippine exhibit, and who had accompanied the president and his party from the station. The president and his party then visited the Philippine exhibit, and then returned to the Louisiana Purchase

SCHOOL NOTES.

Dr. Crozier presented a practical problem to the students of the seventh and eighth grades a few days ago. "If 395 pounds of oats cost $9.05, how much is that per bushel?" It was solved correctly in less than three minutes by two pupils in the seventh grade, and in about the same time by eight pupils in the eighth grade. A little later the same problem was put to all the high school students except those in the Commercial course, with a little slower results, though it was correctly remembered the number of pounds in a bushel of oats. This result in the lower grades is a sufficient indication that arithmetic is receiving proper attention; and with the kind of work now being done in those grades our future high school students will be stronger and not weaker in all their mathematics. It should be understood that mathematics is taught in every grade of the high school, including nearly one year of arithmetic in the beginning and end of the course, though the practice in the latter is not specially confined to feed and grocer's problems. Next week the "School Notes" will give some attention to the high school course of study and the question—what constitutes a "liberal education."

The Thanksgiving offerings to the Herrick Home have been increased by ten cents from Miss Crego's pupils and $2.75 from the eighth grade, which was not in session when the count of donation was taken.

The Teachers' and Patrons' Rally.

The Charlevoix County Teachers' Association will hold a public session at the Charlevoix High School on Friday evening and Saturday, Dec. 9th and 10th. This is the year's "round up" meeting and a good delegation is expected from East Jordan and Bojne City. On Friday evening an address of welcome will be given by H. Lee Iddings, of the local Board of Education, and a response by Supt. J. H. Kennedy of Boyne Falls. Following this "The Mission of the Public Schools" will be discussed by Supt. H. E. Bell of Boyne City and Rev. J. H. Hystop. On Saturday the topics "Professional Improvement" will be presented by Ralph F. Varney, "Essentials in History Teaching" by Supt. Howe, "Elementary Science" by Mr. De Yoe, "The Teacher as a Social Factor" by C. H. Dewey, "Nature Study" by Miss Millinan of the County Normal School, and "Dry Work" by all the teachers present. At the noon intermission on Saturday a warm dinner will be served in the Commercial room by the young ladies of the County Normal Class, and this will be followed by a short program of toasts served up by the Rev. Mr. Vickers, Miss Greenaway and Supt. Bell. The proceeds of this dinner will constitute the nucleus of a fund for the graduation expenses of Normal Class. The high school choices will sing on Friday evening, a solo will be rendered by Miss Burr and a duet by two high school girls on Saturday morning, and a selection by the seventh grade pupils on Saturday afternoon.

It is especially desired that the patrons of the Charlevoix Schools may attend this gathering. The high school room ought to be filled. All are invited to take part in the discussions. Don't forget the date, and bring your friends. F. W. HOWE, Local Com.

Words of All Experiences

Can anything be worse than to feel that every minute will be your last? Such was the experience of Mrs. S. H. Newman, Decatur Ala. "For three years" she writes I endured insufferable pain from indigestion, stomach and bowel trouble. Death seemed the certainest relief from my sufferings. At length I was induced to try Electric Bitters and the result was miraculous. I improved at once and now I'm completely recovered. For Liver, Kidney, Stomach and Bowel troubles Electric Bitters is the only medicine. Only 50c. It's guaranteed by F. G. Hines & Co. Druggist.

Charles E. It is expected that the managers and cities to be represented in the Traverse City meeting next Friday that Mr. Russell will be in charge of the bookings for the circuit.

The Pere Marquette railroad has laid a trestle with a center one of the tracks on their tracks like a mile or three-eighths north from Elsworth. Their track follows up the valley of a small creek, where they have been using a fill trestle for their rails. Recently they determined to do this in the grade it up with gravel. A train and crew were set to work, but before the work was completed the road began to sink, and while the trains can run over it carefully, no one can tell how long it will take to build up a safe and solid road bed there.

Information has reached here from East Jordan that Fred Barclay, aged 25, attempted suicide Tuesday by taking a large dose of laudanum and will probably die. He resided with his parents, and it is said he has been drinking very heavily of late.

Startling Evidence.

From testimony is great quantity is constantly coming in, declaring Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption Coughs and Colds to be unequaled. A recent expression from T. J. Then I began taking Dr. King's New Discovery, and a few bottles wholly cured me." Equally effective in curing all Lung and Throat troubles, Consumption, Pneumonia, La Grippe, Asthma, guaranteed by F. A Story of Russian Power

I think of those who followed me when I had spoken of our early marriage shortly after my arrival. Madame Blanche quite made me the toast, Vladimir I shall ever consider a gentleman, and their best and something to be trusted. I will never answer for them to be trustworthy with a wife before their eyes, however.

"Tut, nonsense," Mr. Gough exclaimed. "If he has eaten for you, she will be ready enough to wed, unless she thinks she has got a soft fool to deal with. I guarantee now to manage the job for him, if you will let me."

"Thank you! I reply coldly. "I prefer to manage my own private affairs."

"As you like. Only I hope you will bring her round to my choice. You see, now that my son is managing and you are with him there is no matter why we should not marry the England in case I've been absent too long abroad; and though I have my excellent manager here who like his boss, I like to have a man who knows always been used to a married duplicate to my single rating Philo."

Within a month, time crawl, which wishes me. This is sound reason. My friends are right. I am on a path and for decide. In a possibly that happiness is to be some to me? This sudden and unexpected hurrying of my prospects quite staggers me. I feel as if I were away in a Dominoville—the connecting of Marchioness where.

"There is none to wish you any. My mother is dead, and I have not, as explain the case in my solicitor. Who is responsible and trustworthy. Lady Ethel Mordaunt, if he has shown a little art to the wishes of my father, I shall be big her gratefully as a nurse, and I go without. Take me to Mr. Gough."

"Shall? Well and announce? Sorry, old as I am, I am in a child so little.

"Not now!" I proceed calmly. "It is different."

"I cannot believe it, Vladimir. Is there anything wrong with your mother or any thing?"

"Not Marianska is the last girl in the world to make a fuss about being a married woman. Nor is there anything when the opposite to make—and so I have—a good reason for my wishing to become more settled with every language."

"And I would dig my money settled on you, and you would be a fool if you go and leave Marianska and your money with her."

"Thank, good uncle. And would you never leave me? Come, Blanche, and tell me what I ought to do. Shall I cash banker? Have one enough in hand?"

I laughed. "I have my money still in Russian Bonds."

"Bonds! Bonds! Bonds! he interrupts. "There is need for you to take a loan from me, and I will give you a bonus of a quarter wages. It makes no difference to me, you know, if I do. I prefer it. Bonds do no good back there, and lose and lose."

I compromised the fuss and taken out a loan.

"Let it remain in Rimbaud & Hardman's, London-gate bankers," he says, and hands it to me.

I put it into my pocketbook. "Is there anything I can do for you before I go?"

"Yes, Vladimir," she responds. And I by gaze to wonder and uplifted, as I she saw in Angel of Liberty descending from the clouds. There is a long pause, during which my thoughts revert to the object of this interview. I feel I owe gratitude particular promptness for bending to my difficult subject. Marianska's mood is soft, and apparently submissive. While I pin my thing about the happy Gold or left Hotel, she leaves the room.

"Mr. Gough has failed to me much about New Mobil and its people. What pride is thine, in Heaven's name, father of his children! I think he is a very good and just man, and they are fortunate who get employment under him."

"Yes, Blanche, he is all that and more. Moreover, he is a man of judgment, practical and sensible. Is not his opinion of me is worth listening to?"

"Has anyone heard philo on my header?"

"Thou, Vladimir! He has no sense remotest sense that I should feel ashamed to see his opinion. Do you thought I were subject to my own judgment?"

"Quite so, Marianska. And when this morning he advised our immediate marriage I waited my own opinion on his way of thinking. He made me do so. Is for his reasons not so subjective that fact admitted of no argument?"

"His reasons Vladimir?"

"And I said, certainly." I continue, I think it is a good idea. I am in a hurry to the world to raise objections under the circumstances. Is not marriage the work felt?"

"Yes, Vladimir." I say, and I have my face turned between anxiety and a blush.

"Ivan." she cries. "Then tellest as we have to be married round my finger. Thinks Mr. Gough that it is time we should quite be one to dwell with? I am surprised at Ivan Petrovitch, in which he thinks of my dignity as to allow this Hughes."

"Ivan Petrovitch is a good man, Marianska, and I was so pleasing to and your mother's sister. Ivan Petrovitch is a good man, and I am sure he is a good man."

"Ivan Petrovitch is the last girl in the world to make a fuss about being a married woman. Nor is there anything when the opposite to make—and so I have—a good reason for my wishing to become more settled with every language."

"And I would dig my money settled on you, and you would be a fool if you go and leave Marianska and your money with her."

WHAT LIGHTNING CAN DO.

When It Strikes a Tree Next Generator Stream and Explodes the Sap.

The explosive force of lightning striking on dead wood is not so rare, so great as some living trees are struck, says the Boston Herald. Though, Mr. William Harris shows that "the stalks of stage of the line three feet in diameter and the fan long bound with hoops of iron half an inch thick and five inches wide, the whole weighing about eighteen tons have been in many instances torn asunder and the hoops of iron scattered about the decks." It will be found as a rule that trees are struck by lightning far more often than are buildings, even if the trees and buildings are close together. This is partly because the trees are, as a rule, higher.

But there must probably be some unknown reason, not only for the frequency with which trees are struck but for the recurrence of such shocks in the case of particular trees, or lines in the same locality. The commonest form of injury is—that two consecutive shocks strike the back of the tree, stripping off a band, wide or narrower, from top to bottom. Sometimes on the oak two or three of those lightning marks are seen, evidently made at different times.

There must be something in the form or situation of "Ruff" below the trees which endangers it. An instance is quoted by Mr. Anderson interesting to look of the church of St. Mary in Gerona, which was frequently struck by lightning, sometimes as often as twice a year. It was noticed that the electric fluid always followed the same track. It was discovered later that the walls were clamped with iron and that the lightning had removed the path in which the metal offered the slightest continuity, destroying the mine between them.

The ground below the tree or building is hard and dry the contact with the earth which the lightning seeks pass its force and dispersion is difficult and the destruction of the object which it strikes is great. This may explain the frequency with which a "blasted" tree is seen extending its dead arms on the summit of some rocky cliff or peak. The cliff is low it is dry and does not easily lead away the current into the earth. At the same time timber clinks unfamiliarly loud in discharge, or perhaps it would be safer to say, the transmission from the cloud to the earth more frequently takes place over the sides of waves and along the wires of rivers than elsewhere.

In a park in one of the eastern counties there is a large lake. The park contains more than trees, it contains than the whole of the rest of the estate. Some miles away is a road, called locally the "lightning road," from the frequency with which accidents have occurred there, either to trees, horses, cattle or passengers. In this park there recently occurred an instance of the opposite effect in certain circumstances not perfectly known.

A very tall spruce, probably 150 feet high, was "exploded" from top to bottom into pieces the size of the wood used in making baits. Every shred of bark was stripped from them and the wood looked as if it had been shredded up for fishing. A similar instance occurred some years ago, when an oak in the grove below the Tod of the Wilde lodge, in Richmond park, excluded under lightning stroke. The tree was cut and sawed, and converted into small particles and the rest of the tree was stamped into white frag ments.

In these cases it is probable that the current acts with a tremendous heat that all the sap in the tree is converted into superheated steam, which explodes. The greater the heat the more of the sap in which moisture lies are exploded and the greater the destruction of the essence of the tree. As there is then moisture between the bark and the trunk, the first and greatest explosion takes place there, instantly driving the bark away into space. Frequently the explosion only takes place at the point.

As Sir Hiram Maxim pointed out the force of explosion of Mont Pelee, a very similar method is now used by the American manufacturers of wood pulp. The logs are placed in a strong chamber and there subjected to the action of superheated steam until the water in every cell is converted into explosive gas. The chamber is then opened and the log explodes, converting itself into wood pulp.

Strategy of an Interview.

There was only one man in Denver who sound authoritatively deny or affirm a report that the great Independence gold mine at Cripple Creek has been sold by W. S. Stratton to an English syndicate, and that was John Hays Hammond, the famous mining expert.

In the lobby of the Brown Palace Hotel stood a group of newspaper men and discussed the wave and means for securing the coveted interview. Mr. Hammond had retired to see them in the party was "Little Lord Fauntleroy," a reporter for a morning paper. He had said that his mother and Mr. Hammond were personal friends, and one of the men had remarked that he ought to land the story for him. They saw him walk to the other side of the lobby and write upon a card and hand it to a bellboy. One of the reporters hurried upstairs, stopped the boy and read on the card.

"JOHN HAYS HAMMOND,
"Son of Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett."

The reporter tore from his copy paper a slip and wrote thereon:

"ARTHUR CLARK,
"Son of old Ben Clark.

"Give this to Hammond, too," he said to the boy.

The reporter joined his comrades and presently the boy came down and said:

"Mr. Hammond says he will see old man Clark's boy."—Saturday Evening Post.

THE POPULAR PULPIT

LOVE AND LIFE

By Dr. R. A. Weiss.

The greatest of these is Love.—1 Cor. xiii, 13.

Life moves under a variety of impulses. Many dynamic forces mingle in apparent confusion in every act and thought of our lives. Many attempt, therefore, to define the motive or the dominant impulse of life in another, and to seek to measure the activities of life by such two or three lightning marks as seem, evidently drawn at different times.

There must be something in the form or situation of "Ruff" below the trees which endangers it. An instance is quoted by Mr. Anderson interesting to look of the church of St. Mary in Gerona, which was frequently struck by lightning, sometimes as often as twice a year. ously in diversity, and only the lesser part of the motive of human reason and impulses explains life as it really is.

Remembering this we are still permitted to select from the mass of human impulses and motives those which seem to be predominant. Generally speaking the dynamic forces of life fall into three great classes or impulses: fear, ambition and love. Love is one tool in the ancient tool chest of man, which is ever in use. We can easily agree with the book Fear and ambition have played and still play an important part in the drama of life. Yet another guest not seldom appears on the stage of human events.

Love has ever inspired and sanctified whatever ambition or fear wrought which was worthy. Love has ever been the inspiration of the Their feet rode lists on the tentless rocky cliffs or prowled in the jungle, the wretchless architecture of Toronto and Jumna. Fear and ambition, chasing the shifting sands of life with deep drawn pious and intricate the sun except glow with inspiration. Love has never reared St. Mark's—it will probably never construct a pyramid. Love, filled its dreams with deathless dreams, its spaces with its visions, its silence and emotion its golden with gentle angels.

Fear and ambition are ancient Fleet ces, skillful conquerors of unimaginable power, but love created the saints. Pieces of Angelo, the singing boys of Bells lidelin, the tiptoe shaft of immortal Giotto, and the lovely poem of Bonifacio. Ambition can do much, but it cannot do all that the ideal can do for humanity. Fear can do much, but it cannot do all that love can do for humanity. Love is the dynamic force of life.

Fear never made a single thing or religion. Love alone makes religion and inspirational. Fear and ambition never made a really great religious leader. Love has the power with inspiration, eloquence and fashions the stuff that religious heroes and martyrs are made of. Love alone is the measure of human greatness. Love alone is infinite in its expansion and reaches to eternity. Love is the dynamic force of life. Love is the soul of all great life. Love is the inspiration of all great art. Love is the inspiration of all great literature. Love is the inspiration of all great religion. Love is the inspiration of all great reforms. Love is the inspiration of all great philanthropy. Fear and ambition have played and still play an important part in the drama of life. But another guest not seldom appears on the stage of human events.

PROBATE COURT.

minimum amount is fixed based upon the population of the different counties. From 1892 to 1901 the population of this county was less than ten thousand and the salary was then six hundred dollars. The census of 1901 showed an increase in population to between 10,000 and 12,000 and the salary from that time on was $750 per year, and an amendment was made to the state law by a second act of the legislature changing the basis of fixing the salaries, and the effect of the change of the law was to fix the minimum amount of the salary for this county at $750. The census taken in June, 1904, showed the population of the county to be approximately 16,000, which made the minimum amount of salary $1,200.00. The boards of supervisors of this county have never given the Probate Judge more than the minimum salary allowed by law.

To the second criticism my reply is that in every the number of the first time I entered on the duties of the Probate office on regular Court days at least to secure the proper filing of papers and the proper record kept of the same. This is a very important matter, and I believe I can truthfully say that this matter has been properly attended to during my term of office, and that any inquiry addressed to the Probate office for information that can be filed there can be promptly found, and if it relates to any proceedings during my administration that full and complete offices can be given promptly from the records of the office. My experience is that this can only be done, in the present volume of business, with the assistance of a Probate Clerk to properly care for the papers and record the same. But my critic seems to think that even if this were true that I should bear the expense. It should be borne in mind that the Probate Judge is serving at a minimum salary and that he ought not to be required to employ such additional help as is necessary with his own efforts to the proper conduct of the office, and it this were not a question then I would add that at my own expense in my Bayne City office that I have a competent assistant as well as a stenographer which enables me to do promptly and correctly much more business than can be done by an individual himself. This also is paid by me. In addition to that, certain fees allowed by law for copies of papers are rightfully the properties of the office, and when these properties are chargeable to the county, as is true in all issues cases as well as in many other matters I have never earned these fees from the county, and about the time the criticism was made, in two cases then pending in my court, I figured up these fees and found that they amounted to eleven dollars in the two cases, under a strict interpretation of the statute. I have always felt that I ought not to charge these properties in a sense I was employed and paid by the people of the county, on a salary basis. Other duties of Probate by other constitutions have been entirely and positively from the court of the Probate Judge on by the Judges themselves. In addition to that, never being charge for this office I have tried to equip myself for the performance of the duties as well as possible, taking advantage of all means to properly inform myself, and one very efficient source of valuable information which might be at least reflect itself in the work of the Probate office, and I believe does, in the State Association of Probate Judges. I have never failed to attend a meeting of the Association since assuming the duties of this office, spending my own time and paying my own expenses, while in several counties of the state the counties think it worth their while to pay the necessary expenses of their Probate Judge while attending these meetings. In connection with my law practice it often happens that I incur expenses for matters amounting to several hundred dollars upon my own judgment; I have tried to treat the wards in the same way. I believe that the expense of the clerk hire is a legitimate charge against the county, that it is equitable, and that it is the duty of the county to pay it, and in presenting the bill to the Board of Supervisors I have made the same representation to the Board of Supervisors that I make here, and the Board have thought that it was right and proper to do so. I still believe it is a righteous charge, and will continue to present the matter to the Board from time to time, and while I do not feel in an article of this character explain all of the things that I would like to explain, anyone who is interested enough to go into a further discussion of the affairs of the Probate office with me I shall be glad at any time to give them my attention and show them anything and everything pertaining to the office whether they may know about it or not.

And I might add that the same critic also says that I had held office in the county for eight years, and that I am not willing to retire, and that it is time for the people to retire me. I have only this thought in reply to that, and that is, that in many of the older counties where the business of the Probate office becomes important as the wealth and population of the county increased they are retaining competent Probate Judges in office from term to term, several Judges of my acquaintance now serving from their fourth term up. I believe that every man is entitled to fill an office just as long as his conduct with the same ought is profitable for the people to keep him there, and I do not now know whether it may be in my interest to fill out the succeeding term that I have been elected to, or whether I shall ever consider it profitable to be a candidate for this or any other office in the future, and whether I do or not I shall endeavor to discharge the duties of the office along the lines that I think are lawful and right, and in the future to accept this or any other office to which the people may see fit to elect me, and in my judgment to my advantage to accept.

CHAPTER XXIV.

After this I could do not to the story of a certain lonely, "Dad-e dee Lu-ella," and summon the pathetic wailings of a hot and a harpsichord, in the shelter of which I was so fascinating that I had been guilty first, when I knew the companion with me to be a Russian spy.

Mr. Gough's eyes is lighted up. I can see the gamble with the five lights from the street, for the blinds are still down. I take my stand some one of those Zingy Bonnetes which hold up the street so as to leave keeping three windows to my eyes.

"Mr. Gough," I say, "I've a little thing to tell you and man, I guess you'll be pleased to hear it." Mr. Gough stops the tune and sits down in a chair, his face harboring for an hour, and commencing, "Well, Mr. Gough, I've got

F. S. DAWLEY.

Director of Farmers' Institute in New York State.

F. S. Dawley of Fayetteville, N. Y., who presents likeness of farmers' institutes and a prominent member of the grange, was born at Elbridge, Onondaga county, N. Y., Sept. 10, 1863, and received his education in common schools and the Moravia Institute. He attended farm work on his father's farm, to farm which they purchased near Fayetteville and had his income so well known as Dodalonia farm. There Mr. Dawley has since resided. He is a noted breeder of Jersey cattle and Cheviot sheep, and he has also raised a great deal of attention to poultry culture. He is a familiar figure at institutes throughout the state and has acted in the capacity of judge of poultry at the most important exhibitions in the past ten years and has packed out the country at times on a hundred days without a rest and being ready in 1901, he became secretary of the State Farmers' Institute, was six years secretary of the New York State Poultry society, has served as master of the Syracuse grange, secretary of the Farmers grange, treasurer of the New York state Dairymen's association, he is present one of the directors of the New York State Breeders' association, chairman of the executive committee of the New York State Fruit Growers' association, secretary of the American Cheviot Sheep society, trustee of Cornell university and director and trustee in at least a dozen other organizations which have to do with the interest of the farmer. In 1900 he was appointed director of farmers' institutes and has made the work a marked success in this state. When he undertook the work he started an entirely original campaign to secure larger results in the farms of the state, and from 1900 the annual production increased from 3,000 pounds in 1880 to 4,272 in 1900 has come from the work. Mr. Dawley is likely to be the opposite of the president to succeed Colonel of assistant secretary of agriculture at Washington.

Money in Grange Halls.

In the state of Maine there are over thirty granges. There are 207 subordinate granges, and 275 of these own their halls, costing an outlay of over $200,000. In the county of Androscoggin there are eighteen granges. Seven of these own halls, at an average cost of $3,000 each, and the value of one cost $8,000 each. In New Hampshire about $120,000 is invested in the same one. Connecticut has about $180,000. New York leads in the cost of grange halls, one at Herkimer costing over $12,000. In that state are several costing the sum of $8,000 and a total of about $500,000. But I will not worry you with details. As for us I have received income and the expenses of this income amounts $2,000. Where a subordinate grange owns its building its influence for good in that community is greatly enhanced.—H. Kelley.

A Power in Michigan.

Michigan is one of the strongest grange states in the Union. The income of the grange is fair and admired by all practice. The state grange has a strong legislative committee of five members, among whom are the master and secretary of the state grange. They are pressed and nothing in carrying out the purposes of the state grange in legislative matters. There are now upward of 700 subordinate granges in the state and 40 Pomonas. Since Jan. 1 six 50 subordinate and 4 Pomona granges have been organized. The total membership of the Order in the state now exceeds 35,000.

Twenty-nine Grange States.

There are now twenty-nine state granges, of which Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Connecticut, New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan and Indiana have so thoroughly organized these jurisdiction that there are from one to twenty granges in nearly every county in New Hampshire and Vermont there is a grange, sometimes two, in each township. There are also granges in Canada, and the Dominion grange always sends a delegate to the national grange meeting in this country.

A New Hampshire Method.

The excellent standing of the subordinate granges in New Hampshire is owing to all. They take pride in the work, and the state grange encourages them by offering a prize portable cabinet desk for superior excellence in the every work. Thirty or more desks will be awarded this year. Prizes are also offered for excellence in degree work.

A Gift to Chautauqua.

Caroline A. Hall, niece of G. H. Kelley and closely associated with him in the formative period of the Order, to whom is belonged the idea of rising Women membership in the Order, has made a gift of $50 to grange headquarters at Chautauqua, N. Y.

A County Board of Trade.

The Pomona or county grange of Androscoggin county, Me., is organizing a board of trade. Each of the eighteen subordinate granges of that county is to appoint a representative as financial agent and these, with a representative of the Pomona grange, will form a board of trade to look after the interests of members of the Order in the county.

County Lecturers' Conference.

If the lecturers of all the subordinate granges in a county would occasionally meet for consultation, all their work they would find the results exceedingly gratifying. Such a conference could be held at the time of the Pomona grange meeting, or perhaps they would find more time at their disposal if the conference was held on some other date.

THE BARGE CANAL.

Senator Ambler of the New York State Grange Legislative Committee Favors Resubmission.

Senator Henry E. Ambler, who was one of the most ardent opponents of the barge canal scheme in the legislature and wishes, will introduce at the earliest opportunity a constitutional amendment of the New York state legislature a bill for the resubmission of the proposition to the voters of the state so that prior action may be taken by the legislature for the repeal of the deal. Senator Ambler argues that the expenditure of $101,000,000, as now contemplated will not suffice for the purpose for which it was intended and Congressman is unable to complete the canal. If the canal is constructed he believes it will be a huge burden upon the agricultural interests of the state and upon real estate in the cities. He further argues that there has been a radical change in the sentiment of voters who supported the measure before, so they did not then have full information as to the possibilities of cost of construction nor that it would be undesirable for the purpose. He believes that the canal should be made a national waterway and its construction paid for by the national government. He has personally stated to be sent to the states of the subordinate granges in the state a communication asking that they notify a petition signed by their members to the canal board asking that no more expenditures be made for the barge canal until such time as the legislature shall convene and consider the proposition anew.

New York State Dairymen's Association.

The New York state dairymen's annual convention will be held in Herkimer county, in the New York. This is one of the strongest agricultural organizations in the Empire state, and it is educational in every particular. It is self sustaining, although it receives no state appropriation. Among the speakers will be governor Hoard of Wisconsin, Dr. W. H. Jordan of Geneva experiment station, Professor Pearson of Cornell and Dr. Hills of Burlington, and several others will be in attendance. It has been decided to allow the exhibition of dairy appliances from the convention for the reason that most of the prominent houses who deal in dairy supplies are now making exhibits at St. Louis at great expense, and the expenditure does not justify such a like date, which will render it quite impossible for them to make a creditable showing at the convention. Granges of central New York will attend this meeting in large numbers.

Jurisdiction of National and State Granges.

The individual grange has jurisdiction over all the granges, issues charters, makes the laws, except that each state grange of course makes its own by-laws, which must conform to the national grange constitution and laws. Each state grange has jurisdiction over its county or district and subordinate granges. In some of the New England states instead of county little three or four divisions or districts. The subordinate granges are the local divisions. Usually there is but one subgrange to township, but there may be more if they conform to the grange law that no two granges shall be nearer together than five miles.

Activities Legislation.

There will be business for the legislative committee of the national grange before congress this winter. It is stated that the manufacturers have organized an association and are soliciting contributions from nine dollars to the United States to raise funds to repeal the ten cent tax from this winter. There is no doubt that a large sum of money will be raised for this purpose, as the tax on each dealer will be $25. As the grange has been ardent in favor of the ten cent tax, it was largely through its influence that the law was enacted. It behooves the subordinate granges to petition their congressmen at once that the law be not repealed.

Grange Control.

To increase membership a grange often chooses some to see which can secure the most new members, the losers to pay for a supper for both sides or some other "penalty." The following scale of points governed in one such contest:

Essay of 10 words or over	100
Essay of less than 10 words	50

Best product of farm or home	15

Adaptability of the Grange.

The grange as an organization is adapted to the needs of every community, says Overseer Fuller of New York. For the locality where men meet the accomodation of every the paramount. Prize the grange has a place, for it unites the accomodation of wealth easier in many ways. For the community where social and intellectual development is the primary motive our order affords the best possible means to carry on educational work and promote social intercourse among farmers. For the community where a fraternal order is needed to draw men closer together and help them to carry each other's burdens the grange stands preeminently form as the only organization affording fraternal benefits to men and women on the same basis of equality.

While the grange may contain only a minority of farmers, it is well to remember Goethe's magnanimous counsel that "everything great and wise was at first in the minority."

Startling Evidence.

Fresh testimony is great quantity is constantly coming in, declaring Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds to be unequaled. A recent expression from Mr. McPartland of Bentonville, Va. serves as example. He writes "had Bronchitis for three years and doctored all the time without being benefited. Then I began taking Dr. King's New Discovery, and a few bottles wholly cured me." Equally effective in curing all Lung and Throat troubles, Consumption, Pneumonia and Grip. Guaranteed by F. G. Dixon & Co. Druggist. Trial bottles free, regular sizes 50c and $1.00.

ROBBERS SCARED OFF

ATTEMPT TO LOOT BANKS IN IOWA AND MICHIGAN.

In Both Cases Citizens Put Up Stiff Fight and Robbers Beat Without Booty—this Fellow Servant Law Is Held Valid.

Robbers tore a safe in the People's Bank at Ankeny, but were frightened away before they secured any booty. A crowd fired several between the robbers and citizens. With five heavy charges of concentrated a party of 25 or more citizens surrounded the safe in the bank of Mechanics Mills. A number of shots were exchanged between the robbers and citizens, and one of the robbers is supposed to have been wounded as a trail of blood was found about the room they endeavored to the tracks. No money was taken from the bank, but the safe and the interior of the building are badly damaged.

FELLOW SERVANT LAW VALID.

United States Court of Appeals Reverses Judge Wing's Decisions.

The claim for damages for loss of property in consequence of the Pullman strike, caused by the burning of Pullman cars, and one of the suits which growing out of the Debs case, in a 20 to 20 Mail R. loss against the Pullman Palace Car Company, were the suits of Jay Gould, Thomas Nelson & Sons, Thomas Nelson, Jr., and Edwin S. Gorham, executor, against the Pullman Palace Car Company, for damages to the amount of $100,000 each, for the burning of their cars during the Pullman strike, and the suit of Thomas Nelson & Sons against the Pullman Palace Car Company for $50,000 for the loss of their property in a similar way, were argued before the United Circuit Court of Appeals at Chicago. The cases in question were brought in Judge Wing's court in the Northern District of Illinois, and were decided against the plaintiffs. The cases were argued before Circuit Judges Jackson and Baker and District Judge Kohlsaat. The question involved in the cases was the liability of the Pullman Company for the acts of its employes under the fellow servant law. The lower court held that the company was not responsible for the acts of its employes, and the Circuit Court of Appeals now holds that the company is not responsible for the acts of its employes.

WILLARD A. SMITH EDITOR.

The Course of Study in the Public Schools.

It is a fact familiar to most residents of Michigan that the lower grades of the village or city school system prepare the pupils for entrance to the high school, and that the high school in turn prepares them for the college or university, provided it employs a sufficient number of teachers and the work is kept up to a certain rank in quality and quantity. Of course all the way along some pupils drop out from the schools without receiving the full course of training. The number of pupils in each grade diminishes to the twelfth and after graduation one university in this state is considered to be sufficient for higher education, if we disregard the professional training of teachers. The system as such is maintained for the benefit of those who can continue in school and not for those who drop out, yet it is also true that the course of training in each grade is, generally speaking, the best the pupil is prepared to receive at that time if he cannot go farther.

It is impossible for the school to give the individual the highest efficiency as a future citizen if he quits the school in the seventh or eighth grade, or even in the twelfth. The state would but defeat its own interests if it sought to complete the education of the pupil in any one grade, and offered no higher opportunities than that grade could furnish. The course in the lower grades is necessarily rudimentary and cannot supply all that the individual needs for life. But the high school, as intermediate between the grades and the college, builds upon the foundation of the former and should furnish a preparation for the latter. In other words, in the high school a beginning can be made toward the special occupation in which and for life will probably be spent. And as all pupils are not to follow the same life work, the high school must supply a variety of courses suited to individual needs. If its work is to be practical in the highest sense.

When a school becomes as large as our own high school is and requires as many teachers as we have for the adequate handling and instruction of its students, it has met one of the conditions required to admit its graduates to the state university. The other condition is met by maintaining a certain standard in its work, and this standard is no higher than ought to prevail as a goal that is giving to parents the best service. The presence of this standard serves as an incentive in the work of the lower grades and its accompanying possibility of a higher education awakens the ambition of many pupils who would otherwise never entertain the desire of going further than the eighth or ninth grade. To test the value of this incentive one has only to compare the work of two high schools of the same school before and after entering upon the university relation; when under the leadership of broad and stimulating scholarship and when under a plan that undertakes to get the pupil out of school as soon as possible into some money-getting employment.

An erroneous impression sometimes prevails that because the modern high school thus prepares for the high education of its pupils by broadening the range of studies offered, it must needs put every student through the whole curriculum, or it throws him. Such a notion could not arise in the mind of anyone who is "practically" acquainted with what the schools are really doing. The opinions of most people concerning school work are derived from hearsay evidence and not from actual visitation. They are not altogether surprised that there has been progress in science, in government, in commerce, in manufacturing and business administration; but every new step in school development is branded a "fad." Grammar, geography, physiology, physical geography, chemistry, in fact almost every study in the curriculum was considered a "fad" when first introduced; so was the steamboat, the locomotive, and the locomotive, not to mention a hundred other evidences of modern progress. But "the man in the street" can see these latter things and must acknowledge their value; he does not see the inside of a school nor comprehend the meaning of its modern work, but compares his hearsay evidence with a limited experience in the old school of the three R's.

The modern school courts investigation and inspection. It aims to serve the whole people and to furnish every student the opportunity of discovering and developing his best powers for the public good. It does not aim primarily to make him the shrewdest money maker or furnish him the best formula by which to "get rich quick." It aims to be "practical" by being useful; it does not aim to be merely utilitarian. F. W. Howes.

Another Hint.

The Independent is informed that men have been in the city of late trying to place stock in a cement plant to be located in a nearby town. We do not presume to dictate where or how anyone shall invest his money, but from careful investigation it looks like it would be a hard matter to find a better direct investment than that offered by the proposed salt factory, besides the benefits that are bound to come to thrift from having the industry in Petoskey. Petoskey Independent.

The SENTINEL is informed that men have been in the city of late trying to induce Charlevoix people to patronize Petoskey merchants. We do not presume to dictate where or how anyone shall invest his money, but from careful investigation it looks like it would be a hard matter to find a better direct investment than for Charlevoix people to act on the advice of the Independent and keep their money at home.

Small pox is ravaging among the Indians of Suttons bay.

Central Lake Torch. The Cameron Lumber Co. has sold all of its beech logs to the Brown Cooperage Co. This will insure a long steady run for the Cooperage Co. as it will make about half the amount needed for a continuous run next season.

A disastrous fire, occurring at 5 o'clock one morning last week, destroyed the store belonging to the Osmond Lumber Co., located at Cecil Bay, resulting in a loss to the store and merchandise of about $13,000, most of which was covered by insurance.

Wolves are increasing rapidly in the upper peninsula and among so many deer that it is proposed to ask the legislature to increase the bounty on them. The idea is that, with the price higher, hunters will make a business of killing them for the financial return.

Petoskey News: W. E. Chrysler and wife of Petoskey, being about to emigrate to Alaska, packed up a boat load of pots, pans and fruits, on the theory that something could be made of it. A letter from Mrs. Chrysler states that they were not disappointed, as apples they purchased for 25 cents per bushel they are selling for 50 cents apiece, or $15 per bushel; oranges for $1 each, etc., and this in spite of the fact that red clover, like those cultivated in the states, flourish wild in that country

Traverse City Record: Dr. W. E. Moon, one of the directors of the Alpena, Gaylord & Western railroad, has proposed line to run across the state from Traverse City to Algona, has received from the secretary, C. N. Ware, blue prints of the maps of the proposed line for filing with the county clerk in this county. The original maps of the survey for this line have been filed and approved at Lansing and the maps will be filed in the counties through which the line is to pass when completed. Mr. Ware states that while the company does not expect to commence building the railroad this work or next week, the outlook for the project is brighter than at any time previous.

Johnson Bros. of Snowflake, a little town on the Pere Marquette railroad south of Charlevoix, are perhaps the only men in this region commercially engaged in extracting the seeds from the cone of the jackpine. During November and December the cones are gathered by Indians on the jackpine patches of Kalkaska county and are shipped by rail to Snowflake, where they are sorted carefully by hand and steamed. They are then subjected to heat sufficiently to cause them to open. The seeds are taken out and "winged" by being rubbed between the palms and then are sorted, packed, weighed and shipped to consignees in various parts of the country. The seeds bring from $7 to $10 a pound.

—A Merry Christmas to every reader of the SENTINEL.

—The Methodist Church will hold its Sunday school Christmas tree exercises on Friday evening at 7:30.

—Christmas will be observed at the Congregational church next Sunday morning and evening with sermons and music appropriate to the season.

—South Arm is frozen over from the head to a point north of Holy Island, but yesterday Pine Lake and the arm at the Ironton ferry were open.

—Petoskey had a "Dike" entertainment last week, for the benefit of some local charity. Friday evening was "Scotch night," and Andrew Sloss, of Charlevoix sang Scotch songs and danced Scotch dances for the edification of the audience.

—We see that a bill is to be presented to the next legislature to do away with the seven inch length limit of brook trout, and to make it a misdemeanor to catch more than 25 in any one day, or to have more than 50 in one's possession.

—The Pastor of the M. E. Church will preach a Christmas sermon, on Sunday morning Topic "The wise men and the babe." Evening topic, "Life a tale that is told." Reference will be made to some of the leading events of the year. Special music.

—The monthly report of State Game Warden Charles H. Chapman estimates the number of deer killed in the upper peninsula during the season at 7,000, against 22,000 last year. There were more hunters in the woods but the deer were less plentiful. Thirty-seven men were convicted of violating the law and 17 seizures were made.

—Supt. Cross reports that farmers are coming in daily in good numbers and making pea raising contracts. The acreage on Beaver Island will be fully as great, if not greater than last year. Rev. A. F. Engelder is representing the Ferry Co. there under the direction of Mr. Cross. There is no doubt whatever that the crop next year will fully reached the projected increased capacity of the warehouse.

—Representative N. V. Lovell of Berrien county has drawn up a bill providing for the abolishment of the state tax commission. Mr. Lovell believes the commission has not fulfilled its purpose. It is pointed out that while the tax commission may be abolished, it will still be necessary to have a state board of assessors to assess the railroads provided the system of taxing transportation companies on the value of their property is continued.

—Judicious advertising is an integral part of correct business methods. The merchant who ignores the use of printer's ink, or who blindly advertises without system or correct judgment as to value of mediums or methods, is soon known by his lack of desirable custom. The people who attempt to save money by avoiding advertising bills in this age of sharp advertisers and keen competition, always find when too late that they have wasted their opportunities.

—A Pere Marquette construction party completed the siding to the Cement Co's railroad line last Friday. The cement Co. people have decided to erect their lime kilns at the gravel pit instead of near the P. M. railroad, and have begun operations in hunting the foundations. They have the city crusher at work turning out material for that work. The company has considerable hemlock and hard wood timber on its property and they will put in a portable saw mill to provide their own building material for factory buildings.

—Dr. J. B. Thielen and family left this morning for Gotham, N. Y., where they will spend the holidays with the Doctor's parents. Soon after January 1st the Doctor will go to New York city, where he will spend the remainder of the winter in clinical study at Bellevue Hospital. Mrs. Thielen and children, in the meantime, spend the time with relatives in Ohio and Virginia. Dr. Thielen and family will return in April and the Doctor will resume his practice here, where he has made very many friends personally, and built up a large and lucrative practice by sheer force of worth and professional ability.

—Herl Wilbur is home from Albion college for the holidays.

—Dan Stack is home from Ann Arbor for the holidays.

—Storm warnings were ordered discontinued Dec. 15th.

—J. L. Crane's new ad. this week has information of value to holiday purchasers.

—Rev. J. W. Vickers went to the Beavers Tuesday, and expects to return today or tomorrow.

—Sam Rose has been gathering white fish spawn for the New York fish commission the past ten days.

—Game Warden Chapman, of the Soo, was here Tuesday looking up alleged violations of the game laws.

—The steamer F. W. Fletcher, well known here, left St. Ignace for Chicago Saturday, with a cargo of lumber.

—J. R. Nicloy has been appointed supervisor of Eveline township, to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of D. S. Payton.

—H. C. Cooper will be appointed deputy county treasurer on January 1st, and will remain in the office with county treasurer Payton two or three months.

—It is stated on excellent authority that papers have been signed by which the Zille Railroad acquires the Cheboygan, Hammond and Bayou, and Pere Marquette system, which comprises about 4,000 miles.

—Chas. H. Pellinger, whose new ad. appears in another column, calls your attention to his fine display of Christmas gifts, and optical goods, the latter department under the charge of Fred Bellinger a graduate optician.

—Although the new steamboat inspection rules have not yet reached vessel owners, their importance is causing considerable interest. It is said one clause requires a uniformed watchman for every 250 persons carried.

—A young lady at Charlevoix told her beat young man that he reminded her of the Venus of Milo. Whereupon the young man thought he was a "beast." He looked in the dictionary and found the Venus of Milo had no arms. Then he went in the cellar and tried to bust his brains out on a soft cabbage.—The Star.—That is a fair sample.

—County treasurer elect D. S. Payton has leased the Baker house at the head of Antrim street, and will move in soon after Jan. 1st.

—Some very fine catches of white fish were made by the tugs the past week, but the catch is about finished. Trout and "chubs" will now keep the nets busy as long as the lake remains open.

—E. V. Madison left last week on an extended southern and western trip. He goes from here to New Orleans and from there west. He will visit Salt Lake City, Los Angeles and other Western cities, and expects to be gone a month or more.

—The Sunday school Christmas exercises will be held in the Congregational church on Sunday evening at 7 o'clock. The program consists of a very pretty little Cantata and varied other features. The occasion promises to be pleasant. All are invited to attend.

—Why should Hit Grace the Duke have given "Charlevoix the Beautiful" the go-by in this contemptuous manner. Of course senator Bill Mears lives in the other end of the county but, had the Duke called we would do our big pug, cut a caper and get out the band. We feel real bad about the matter.

—It was reported here last Thursday that His Grace the Duke of Manchester was in town. He was known to have been at Central Lake, hobnobbing with Jim Clements and the report got about it was given credence. A gentleman of austere bearing, and a single eye was seen riding about town, viewing everything as if he owned it. Of course it must be the duke. It seems His Grace did not come north of Central Lake—having "got his fill" there. It now appears that it was a member of the board of tax commissioners, travelling incognito. There is very little difference between a duke and a tax commissioner.

—The first meeting of the S. S. S. will be held as soon as the Beaver lays up and Capt. Billy Finnegan can get two cords of wood split and a clothes line fix set up in the back yard. The meetings, as usual will be held in Capt. Wilbur's office, provided Wilbur adjusts certain differences that existed last winter with respect to the proper use of fuel, with due regard to comfort, and does not charge the incidental expenses. There was some friction last winter along those lines. The first business of importance will be the election of officers, and it is expected that this will create some turmoil, as Capt. Pete Campbell, who is the de facto president, is only a "mob-over," there being no election last winter, owing to a difficulty in getting a quorum. Campbell has exhibited a very arbitrary disposition in his position as presiding officer, and most of the members want a change. Wilbur is the only man that stands by Campbell, but it is understood that this is due to a fear on the part of Wilbur that Campbell will spend in a little common council matter that both were interested in some time ago. Some very interesting proceedings are expected this winter after Pete gets the Beaver laid up and Wilbur gets his office moved up to Bridge street.

—Contending that the present considerable difference in the laws of the three states bordering on Lake Superior, with reference to fishing in that body of water, work an injustice to Michigan fishermen, the fishing concerns operating at ports within the jurisdiction of the Wisconsin authorities will at the coming session of the legislature make a determined effort to be relieved of the discrimination. In this state, the close season is from Oct. 20 to Dec. 15, during which period it is unlawful to catch any kind of fish in the lakes. In Wisconsin the closed season extends from Nov. 15 to Dec. 15, but during that time fishing for herring is allowable. In the waters of Minnesota there is a closed season for trout and whitefish, but the "long jaws" and "blue fins" are not protected, and there form the greater portion of the fish which are caught all over the lake. The Michigan concerns are compelled to cease operations on the 20th of October, but those of Minnesota and Wisconsin can lift nets the year round if the weather is permitting. Uniform regulations concerning fishing in Lake Superior at least are advocated by the Michigan concerns, and the legislature will be asked to take steps to bring this about through the deliberations of a joint interstate conference. Considerable data will be referred to, the question has been gathered for submission to the lawmakers. It not a uniform agreement at least some remedial action is desired.

A CAPTURE.

Sheriff Pearson and Petoskey Officers Catch a Pair of Thieves.

Petoskey Daily News.

Ten hours after he had made the boast that he would like to see anyone "touch" him for any money, a horseman of Boyne City, whose name is withheld at present, was relieved of his roll of $160 Thursday by a very smooth and well appearing young woman, who gave her name to the officials as Jennie Rose when captured Friday in Petoskey by Under Sheriff Burns, when, with a companion by the name of Walter Smith, she was about to take the train for Mackinaw City. The larceny took place at a well-known resort in Boyne City, where the above mentioned victim of the larceny was in company with the woman. The horseman was not slow in discovering his loss and immediately communicated the information to Sheriff Pearson at Gaylord. The officials at Petoskey and surrounding towns were notified in turn and ordered to keep a close watch for the woman and her lover, Smith. Procuring a rig at Boyne City the woman and her swain drove to Petoskey, where they spent Thursday night, coming in a local hotel, believing that they were secure from all discovery.

At 8 o'clock yesterday morning Friday for the arrest of Jennie Rose and Walter Smith, that being the first information that Sheriff Pearson had of the affair. Acting in the capacity of Sheriff Smith, who although confined to his home with illness, took an active interest in the case, Under Sheriff Burns skillfully traced the smooth pair and finally located them Friday morning at the depot as above stated.

The guilty pair, somewhat surprised at their sudden arrest, called all knowledge of the crime at first, the woman being emphatic in her statements of innocence. They were at once taken to the home of Sheriff Smith, where the woman was searched by two ladies, assistants and the $70 found carefully concealed in the lining of her coat and that and other articles of clothing was good evidence that she was the party wanted. Sixty dollars was found in her companion, $6 of which was cleverly slipped in the hand of its bait. On being questioned further the woman confessed her crime, stating that the bait taken she money. A gold watch and other valuable articles were found on the first business of importance was the election of officers, and it is expected that this will create some turmoil, as Capt. Pete Campbell, who is the de facto president, is only a "mob-over," there being no election last winter, owing to a difficulty in getting a quorum. This is in addition to the crushed rock with which the Elk Cement & Lime company has to furnish its own factory at Elk Rapids.

WICKLY'S WOODS

By R. W. TAYLOR

CHAPTER I.

Coming back from the small dry goods store that serves the government for a postoffice, John Wickly, an everybody popularity called the head of the Wickly family, was thoroughly disgusted to be meeting at a supplementary social party and to have his correspondence bugle in the air.

Mrs. Wickly, at the kitchen table therefore, was disturbed in the unmitigated enjoyment of a cup of coffee and a cinnamon roll and heavily upset by the cool and serene air of old and young Wickly as they strolled the setting sun out of the front door.

"Now, you go to bed, you little dear," said John, sitting down in a rocking chair and lighting a cigar. "I want to talk about the state of affairs around this town. I want to get your advice."

"Make up your mind to it," said Mrs. Wickly, with a quivering sigh. "You are unbearable without advice. Ever since we moved into the village of Little Weeds from the village of Wickly Woods you have been unbearable."

"Why, I'm kind and best man you ever saw," said Mrs. Wickly. "I was talking about the village of Little Weeds."

"Well, I mean, I mean, I mean," said Mrs. Wickly, with her hands her eyes, and sobbing in a manner that would have made her husband's heart ache if he had not been accustomed to her ways. "I mean, I mean, I mean,

CALL IS FOR LIGHT.

LET THE PRESIDENT ACT ON HIS OWN SUGGESTION.

Public Has a Right to Know What These Gigantic Combinations Say for Elections, His Own Among the Number—Let the Accounts Be Opened.

Now that the election is over and past, let us approach certain matters of vital importance to the people from the side of conscientiousness and wisdom rather than without reflection or hesitation to the solicitations of evil in any other candidate for President. One of these matters is the secret of those great combinations of corporate interests known as trusts, as opposed to general political contributions, the trusts being invariably identical with the supporters of privilege. All that the people know about them, instead of the fact of their gigantic dishonesty of influence, is what their grasp is called upon, and this is very little, indeed, usually incomplete and usually misleading. Yet these committees of our commercial life are preparing to use the authority of prosperity for our working population and further injure them. The general economic question involving liberal access to raw materials and restraint the trusts.

President Roosevelt deals with this question in one of his recent campaign speeches in Indiana. He set forth the fact that the free importation of raw materials would not injure labor. Some one taught him, however, that behind the people the Republican organization of these trusts, which, of course, is possible against which compel such an alliance of "open shop" and "closed shop" was manifestly absurd. Labor is as free to organize as capital, and is as free at the ballot box. The trusts and the bosses of corporations are elected in the new Department of Commerce and Labor and its head was instructed by law to make inquiries into the affairs of the organizations and the operations in trusts, so as to furnish the public information that protected in the interests of the prosecutor, etc., and to recommend to Congress such as it may deem necessary.

Now, we have heard many words of the form of relief through the good intentions of the Department, but no information has authorized or publicly given that relief could be enacted. Yet it is publicly known that the Department of Commerce and Labor is the very agency to which the President, in his speech, referred as the agency of the Government of which Mr. Cortelyou was the head, for Mr. Roosevelt—so he said—"is the agent of the people of the whole of them—and a talented and excellent gentleman who will present the side of organization of the people." Let us hear from this side, and consider.

There is another consideration to that effect of a further publicity than that to which President Roosevelt referred. It is the effect upon the minds of the people of the secret contributions to political campaigns. It is notorious that the contributions of the trusts are in the interests of privilege. The trusts are not in the market intelligently with the people the "open" market, the "open" market, the "open" market,

Renewed Publication.

The Harbor Springs Republican has been received by L. A. Clark, its veteran proprietor, and appears again this week alive and well, apparently prepared for another long and useful career. The Republican claims to be the pioneer paper of this vicinity. It was certainly one of the first Republican journals about Little Traverse bay. From the new settlement of 1879 it has been identified with and something of a force in very essential development of Emmet county. The Republican announces that it will be strictly republican in politics hereafter, and will devote its best efforts to help the building up of this section and every interest thereof, paying particular attention to the local news of Harbor Springs and vicinity in preference to all else. Whether Harbor Springs can supply sufficient patronage to entitle it to they deserve to be two live and lively local papers, both republican in politics, is the question that must now face and work out as best they may. The Record most heartily wishes both the Republican and the Graphic the best of good luck, and may they both live long and prosper.—Petoskey Record

It is true that the Republican is one of the earliest papers in Emmet county, and deserves to live and prosper, but there is one phase of early Northern Michigan journalism that our Emmet county friends lose sight of. The SENTINEL is the pioneer paper of the territory now comprising Emmet county.

The SENTINEL was started in March 1880. The legislative act creating Charlevoix county took effect April 1st, 1880. Previous to that the territory now comprising Charlevoix county was a part of Emmet county.

At least two issues of the SENTINEL were issued previous to April 1st, consequently it is the pioneer paper of Emmet county.

We are proud of it, whether the people of Emmet county are or not.

A Row in the Game Warden's Office.

When Game Warden Chapman deposed his chief deputy, Charles E. Brewster of Grand Rapids, a few weeks ago and appointed W. K. Hoyt of Grand Haven in Brewster's place he didn't know what a bunch of trouble he was laying up for himself.

Brewster is after Chapman's scalp and has carried his case to the governor. Formal charges have not yet been preferred, but Governor Bliss has been approached by Brewster, and an investigation of the game department may be the result.

A little bit of feminine dictation has figured in the Brewster fight, which is of long standing. Chapman now employs the same stenographer in his office at the Soo who was employed by Chase S. Osborn, former railroad commissioner. There were stories in the old days of how bearded politicans objected to interviewing before any woman in a state department, and now it is mentioned as one reason for the friction in the game department that Brewster's masculine pride could not brook orders from any stenographer.

Chapman has so far borne a reputation for economy, and the investigation of Brewster's expense accounts by the legislature of 1901 showed that Brewster was not built on economic lines.

Game Warden Chapman was called to Lansing last week by Governor Bliss, who says: "Brewster was a hard working, diligent officer and satisfactory in many ways, but we are sometimes compelled to do things in business we don't altogether like."

SCHOOL NOTES.

On account of Christmas coming so close to the end of the school week the holiday vacation will begin on Friday noon this year. Nearly all the grades will have some kind of Christmas program during the latter part of Friday forenoon. Parents are cordially invited to attend these exercises.

School work is resumed in all the rooms except the Normal on Monday, Jan. 9, 1905. The work of the Normal class begins on Jan. 2, as they have but one week vacation at this time.

The manual training work done by the pupils of Miss Tuttle's room and the members of the county Normal class attracted much favorable attention at the recent Teachers' and Patrons' "Daily."

State Superintendent Fall has issued a call for a meeting of the superintendents and teachers of the various county Normal classes in the Senate room at Lansing on Dec. 26. Charlevoix will have at least one representative at this meeting.

The Mishicot Times, our state educational weekly recently published the names of all the active members of the State Teachers' Association who attended the meeting at Ann Arbor last year. The whole of Charlevoix county was represented by two persons only. Miss Lillian Gerard and Supt. I. W. Howe. The object in this publication was to stimulate a more representative attendance this year. Many teachers soon to lack professional spirit in this matter, it will probably be worth while to watch for the publication of the revised list of members of the state association after the coming meeting at Lansing, Dec. 26-29.

The teachers of the Charlevoix Public Schools and the members of the county Normal class will make a professional study of the monthly number of the magazine "Educational Foundations." These studies will begin in January, under the leadership of Supt. Howe and others that may be appointed from time to time. Parents and patrons who are interested in current educational questions are invited to attend these meetings.

Worth of All Experiences.

Can anything be worse than to feel that every minute will be your last? Such was the experience of Mrs. S. H. Newman, Decatur, Ala. who "for three years" she writes, I endured insufferable pain from indigestion, stomach and bowel trouble. Death seemed inevitable when doctors and all remedies failed. At length I was induced to try Electric Bitters and the result was miraculous. I improved at once and now I'm completely restored." For Liver, Kidney, Stomach and Bowel troubles Electric Bitters is the only medicine. Only 50c. Guaranteed by F. G. Hixon & Co. Druggist.

DUKE SHOT A BEAR.

Exciting Experience of the Grace of Manchester.

For the first time on his present tour of the country the Duke of Manchester has talked freely of his Michigan trip to a Detroit reporter. As democratic as an Ann Arbor college graduate, a squatter baron, the titled foreigner told in characteristic language of a successful bear hunt he had enjoyed at Central Lake.

"Oh, I had a good time!" exclaimed the duke with enthusiasm, and I had a good time. Do you know they got a bear for me? He was under a fallen hollow tree when they scared him out. "They said to me, 'We'll better get in too chase,' but I said, 'I'm going to get as close as I can.' I had high boots on and was about the only one properly dressed for such a hunt. So, loaded down as I was, I ran like a hare toward the bear. I could hear the dog barking, as was a bull terrier, owned by Mr. John Pieke, and had never seen bear before. I thought the way he was barking that he had treed the bear, and sure enough he had. The bear was up a little tree and was reaching down every now and then with his paw trying to land on the dog. But the bull terrier—magnificent dog that—kept out of his reach, but kept close to the tree. Then I got my shot. I hit the bear fair in the head. I was about eighty yards off, I imagine. Well, I am not saying much about that shot, but I confess I am a bit proud of it. The bear dropped dead at once.

"When we started in for hunting trip we had a big crowd with us. There was a long line of men, carrying shotguns loaded with buckshot, rifles and other arms. I was more afraid of being shot by my own jealous team of an encounter with the bear. But everything turned out all right."

Drives to Desperation.

Living in an out of the way place, remote from civilization, a family is often driven to desperation in case of scoffers, scalding in Burns, Cuts, Wounds, Ulcers, etc. Lay in a supply of Bucklen's Arnica Salve. It's best on earth. 25c, at F. G. Hixon & Co. Drug Store.

Anyone laboring under the impression that the pine of upper peninsula is nearly exhausted may have their views changed by the fact that Harry Dark of Ashland has just closed a contract for logging 150,000,000 feet of white pine in Chippewa and Alger counties.

The Otsego Club mill at Traverse City broke all records for the hardwood cut in this region by the one just completed. From Nov. 15, 1903, until Nov. 25, 1904, the mill cut 25,000,000 feet. Of this amount 1,000,000 feet was cut by the Reitmer mill.

No taxes have been levied in Clear water township, Kalkaska county, this year. One is inclined to envy the people there of such ideal conditions and environments. The greater part of Clearwater borders on the upper Manistee river and the township is said to contain more pine stumps and a greater variety of white and black even the notorious county of Hewecomen.

Reports from Central Lake state that enterprising little village has done itself proud in the entertaining of the Duke and Duchess of Manchester, who spend Thursday and Friday there, where they indulged themselves in a hunting trip. Thursday evening the royal guests were entertained at a game supper at The Pine Tavern by Proprietor John Pieke, who is an old friend of the duke, having been born in the same county in England. The reports state that the celebration in honor of the distinguish guests rivaled that of any Fourth of July "blow out."

The opening of the winter fishing season was marked by two fatalities at Traverse City. Joseph Grant and Paul Wanowski left in the former's boat to set their nets. Later Tony Sutlski found the boat drifting full of water, with the net lines floating. He came ashore and gave the alarm. The lay was perfectly still so that a sea could not have swamped the boat, and what caused the disaster will never be known, as there was a heavy fog. Both men were longsuffering by occupation and only fished occasionally. Wanowski leaves a widow and ten children and Grant a widow and seven children.

Startling Evidence.

Fresh testimony in great quantity is constantly coming in, declaring Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption Coughs and Colds to be unequaled. A recent expression from T. J. McFarland of Bonaventure, Va. serves as example. He writes: "I had Bronchitis for three years and doctored all the time without being benefited. Then I began taking Dr. King's New Discovery, and a few bottles wholly cured me." Equally effective in curing all Lung and Throat troubles, Consumption, Pneumonia and Grip. Guaranteed by F. G. A NEW HEALTH IDEA.

English Physician Advocates Dwelling in Revolving Houses.

An English physician has seriously suggested that people should dwell in revolving houses, for the sake of health! He holds that we need plenty of sunshine and fresh air, and that this can only be obtained in a proper degree by facing the windows toward those quarters commodious.

It might be rather awkward, however, in points, one, for instance, might want the sun at the back of his house while the neighbors insisted upon it for the drawing room in front. In a modern flat the subject would be fraught with such difficulties as to make the janitor tear his hair in dismay, while just how the revolving could be accomplished in a row of closely built houses is a question to imagine the spectacle of the new Bellevue-Stratford turning slowly and majestically on its axis—it would, indeed, be a remarkable sight, and need less to add, rather a difficult accomplishment.

If revolving houses ever come into vogue—as perhaps they will, who knows—every individual will have a good alibi to avoid a domestic upheaval every hour of the day.

Too Much Talk Already.

The other day at a meeting of workers in the vineyard a sister was asked to address the audience. She blushingly acquiesced, but alas, the girl stood stammered and stuttered, and finally sank down into her seat, quite speechless. The embarrassment was so thick you couldn't hear a pin fall. Her friends came to the rescue and made excuses for the sister, when suddenly up popped the lady Indignant. "I will nothing" she cried, "because there was nothing to say. We are all talking too much" and down she sat again, this time amid sympathetic laughter.

Next Occupants of Thrones.

There are fifteen thrones in Europe, and every one promises to pass from father to son. The lucky ones are those of Great Britain, Germany, Denmark, Portugal, Norway and Sweden, Holgaria, Russia, and Italy. The sultan may be succeeded by a brother, and the king of Spain by a sister. The emperor of Austria, the kings of the Belgians and the king of Roumania, both childless, while the ruler of Holland has no visible successor at present.

"So Allan Boyle went to the circus."

"Yes, by heck! An he came home just enough to show up a crow."

"What happened?"

"Why, he bought a photograph of each of the freaks of "the side show. After that he was mistaken for a picture and arrested."

"That must have made him furious."

"He said only the worst comes from feeding the fresh pictures, and the local paper stated that the man got hold a pocketful of faulty photographs."—New York Telegraph.

—A veteran hunter from the northern part of the state makes some decidedly pertinent suggestions relative to proposed changes in the game laws which should be of interest to local sportsmen. He takes the ground that the present law allowing each hunter three deer in one season is all right and that the proposed limitation to one deer is one needed. If something is done to kill off the wolves and also to stop illegal killings by residents, he says the deer question will take care of itself. Another veteran hunter estimates that there are at least fifty packs of wolves in the Upper Peninsula and that they average about fifteen animals to a pack. They live mostly upon deer and upon the theory that it takes two carcasses a night to satisfy each pack, it can easily be seen that the slaughter proposition we've been the thousands of deer a small bounty upon wolves, but it is not sufficiently large to induce hunters to trace the tigers of the northern winters and trail them down. If the inducement should be made sufficiently large, while the expense to the state would be temporarily increased it would not be long before the results would be satisfactory.

—The first real blizzard of the winter came upon us yesterday morning, and raged ferociously all day. Although the temperature was not low, the air was full of snow, and movements impeded by drifts.

—Mrs. Jessie Coulter, wife of Alva L. Coulter, died at her home in the village Tuesday morning, after a long and painful illness. Deceased was the daughter of Mr. Mary B. Heaton, of East Jordan. She was born on the shores of Oneida Lake, N. Y., thirty-five years ago. With her mother and step-father she came to East Jordan twenty-five years ago. She was married Sept. 29th 1887. Besides her husband, whose direction to her through the years of her suffering has been remunitting, she leaves two sons—Clyde and Clare Coulter. The funeral is from the home today.

—It may not be generally known that the best blooded horse that was ever owned in Northern Michigan is the property of S. W. Miller of this place. "A. Jay" was purchased at the Chicago horse sale by Mr. Miller last fall. The official book gives "A. Jay's" pedigree as follows: "Brother to Rose Croix, 2 11¼, winner of Kentucky Futurity 1896, and sire of Ben Jay 2 22¾; son of Jay Bird 9069 (sire of Hawthorne 2 04¼, Allerton 2 09¾, and dams of Beale Drake 2 08¼, Crescent Route 2 08¼, 58 others in 2 30¼); dam Lizzie Rider (dam Rose 2 17, by Billy Wilkes 2808, second dam Miss Lucinda dam of Judge Rider 2.26) by Mambrino Patchen 58."

—Any time in a good time to "quit your foolishness" but, young man, Jan. 1st, 1905 is a good time to begin being decent. If you now the wind you will reap the whirlwind. Cut out all manner of evil. Be courageous, upright and manly. So depart yourself that you can look your mother or sister in the eye with pride and a consciousness of rectitude. It pays. Cut out the little foolish sins that are sure to grow into greater sins. Be a man. There is no greater creature on the earth than a young Christian gentleman, unless it be a Christian mother. The two together will close the doors of hell, and adorn the world as jewels in a crown. The SENTINEL wishes for every young man in Charlevoix a happy New Year, and a long, happy and useful life. Young man begin the work next Sunday morning.

—The Michigan Drug Drivers' society have completed their tests of gingerine, and have made many valuable and interesting discoveries in regard to the root. In general gingerine seems to act as a powerful stimulant, its effect upon the heart and nerves being noticeable at once. It resembles opium in that it raises the spirit to an abnormal height for the time, but unlike the juice of the poppy it produces no lasting effect. The danger arising from continual use of the drug is that the system becomes over-stimulated and it impaired. When the reports from other drivers outside the state have been received a full analysis of the experiment will be made. A pamphlet of 90 to 40 pages containing a history of gingerine and its species and their effects will be published.

Just Casual Observations.

Congressman Darragh writes for figures on commerce passing through Charlevoix harbor, as the custom house records do not cover more than one quarter of the total shipments. These statistics are desired to aid in getting an appropriation for the harbor this winter. Well, we just arise to observe Charlevoix harbor has deep enough water for its passenger boats, but not enough for the deeply laden ore and lumber vessels. So far as the SENTINEL is concerned, we pass it up. Up to date, all the work that has been done to secure harbor appropriations has been done by Charlevoix absolutely without help from up lake shippers. The SENTINEL has for many years tried to arouse these people to the true situation with reference to a systematic and authentic exhibit of Pine Lake commerce, but without avail. Now, it is up to them. If Boyne City and East Jordan want deeper water let them at least meet us half way. It is up to you gentlemen.

We observe that old king coal has sized up the block wood market in these parts in unwonted activity. Many of our people are using hard coal for heating, and wood, both dry and green is plentiful—the former $4.25 to $5.00 and the latter from $4.25 to $4.50 per cord, and many loads remain on the street for hours awaiting buyers. There is plenty of wood in the county, yet.

We are constrained, also, to observe that concerning Northern Michigan weather there is much less ignorance abroad in the land than there was formerly. Those of more southern latitudes have been made to believe that "up north" in Michigan meant forsooth, in summer delightfully cool breezes and in winter mountains of snow piled up and continuous zero temperature. The latter part of this proposition is an error. The record shows that Detroit and Chicago have had colder weather and more of it thus far this winter than we have had here. The Atlantic Coast two degrees south of us had blizzards and snow blockades before the dinghies were put up here. Since December first the average of temperature here has been about twenty degrees above zero.

Lorraine Convicted.

Before Justice Benton Tuesday, in the justice court of A. B. Nicholas vs. C. L. Lorraine, the jury rendered a verdict of guilty, and Lorraine was fined $50 and costs—a total of $59.50.

In the trial it was brought out that some irresponsible party had said to a brother of Mulhead, (the defendant in the libel suit incendiary case) that he believed Nicholas could be "fixed" for about $2500. On this foundation Lorraine, in his paper, stated that Nicholas had made overtures to Mulhead to discontinue proceedings for $2500.

Lorraine fell down badly in every phase of his defense, and the jury was only out long enough to be decent.

This is a complete vindication of Prosecutor Nicholas who, during the late campaign was charged in Lorraine's paper with official corruption. Mr. Nicholas was represented, in the trial by J. M. Harris. Lorraine has applealed the case to the circuit court.

By H. W. TAYLOR

CHAPTER III.

"Would you mind waiting a little while with me, Miss Winkle? I want you to see just what we are doing, and what we are going to do in the way of digging up your property before we go home." Mr. Fred Hensley continued the matter twice last week. And after considering it, we concluded that you ought to see for yourself and fully understand our situation. We have concluded that our operations must be much more extensive than we at first contemplated. And perhaps Fred Hensley, who is a man of practical communication, ought to be given another opportunity to explain, and in simple such a statement to the "in the Hatch," said Mr. Hensley on a Saturday afternoon some two weeks after the occurrence included in the first chapter.

"I wish you would take two away afternoons, Mr. Hensley, and meet Wickle to-morrow morning." Mrs. Winkle said, "I don't mind, I'm sure, if I do."

"Well, I don't mind, I'm sure, if I do," said the gentleman, with a bow.

"Very well, then, we will meet you at the Wickle house, Mr. Hensley," said Mr. Winkle, "and we will go together."

"Very well, then, we will meet you at the Wickle house, Mr. Hensley," said Mr. Winkle, "and we will go together." Mrs. Winkle, with a proceeding as an unusual spirit, and indicated herself, and that those eyes from about your face, and fled before the dancer and then disappeared even the twigs.

He paused again and looked at her astonishingly, and a little apprehensively, but with the dimpled smile still slipping out rapidly.

"I think I could, if you making—really now and strange as it is to me. Would you like to see me do it?"

"Well, I don't mind, I'm sure, if I do," said the gentleman, with a bow.

ABOUT THOSE PRICES

SMALL QUANTITIES OF GOODS SOLD CHEAPER ABROAD.

So Long as the American Wage Standard Is Maintained the Selling of Few Goods to Foreigners Is Cut Prices Hurts Nobody but Foreign Manufacturers.

The usual Democratic bugaboo about American manufactures being sold at lower prices abroad is again in full blast, but what of it? Admitting, for the sake of argument, the whole charge, what does it amount to? Who has suffered? Not the American wage earner, because there is no instance on record of any American manufacturer having asked his work people to accept less wages on that portion of his output which he is compelled to sell at lower prices abroad than at home because of the larger and labor saving goods with which he has to compete in foreign countries. Unanimously, as the American wage earner has not suffered, it follows that neither the farmer, the storekeeper, the businessman, nor any of those whose welfare depends on the wages of the wage earner, have suffered.

Supposing, also, for the sake of argument, that it was made compulsory by law, as some by tariff reformers, that the price of American manufactures should be sold for more money at home than what was the case for it abroad, would, sitting against the charge leveled to what would be the result? Would not the American wage earner be obliged to accept lower wages, not only in view of his make in said abroad, but on all the output of his brain and hands? More than that, would he not see that he had to labor reduced as it is notorious that goods made in cheap labor countries are offered and pushed for sale in the country against the United States at even lower prices than in the country of their manufacture and other countries?

But, say the Democrats, the American people are also suffering because as American sewing machine, the business has been so large as to be brought for less as may in London then in New York, necessitating than to be sold at it? The American workman who made that machine has been paid for it, or "or making it as he was paid for making the one which was sold in New York. Consequently he has had money enough in his hot hand, a barrel instead of a period as in 1893-1896, and the American farmer has this been able to give his s' working with the money to buy a sewing machine and this tight-fisted one stores. Her son, one of that machine leaver room, for another to his mark, and the American sewing machine maker gets his wages over again. So it goes, an endless chain, benefiting equitably as each and every link is paid out. What is true of the sewing machine is true of at least other line of American manufactures which finds a market abroad. The farmer the factory product the larger his market growth, and the larger demand in every line of American other.

As the New York Sun recently said editorially: "The census of 1900 reports that 29,000,000 of the people of the United States are engaged in gainful occupations. Upon that basis the number of persons employed today is probably about 32,000,000." These figures include the Cleveland factory workers, as also owners of all kinds. Less is not forthcoming, but if so also prices from this nation of workers for pay will suffer, per above in so far as mentioned line, but in all Hand? True, our natural resources are gigantic, but it is now their factory, and the busy factory alone, which creates and continues our immense home market for those resources. The lesser is clear. The only way to make our manufactures and so cheaply at home as some of our surplus to add abroad is to remove the protective features of our tariff. This is the issue before you we are asked to close. Would it not be folly, nay, madness to open such a door and thus imperil the wages of not only 32,000,000 people, but also of the, at least, 60,000,000 of women, children, aged, and infirm, dependent upon them?

If we export $500,000,000 worth of manufactures yearly to be set against $2,000,000,000 worth of manufactures in that, fiscal year, the laborer gets about $1,500,000,000 of the proceeds. This comes to him for direct manufacture, transportation, marketing and tied making, clerical work, in every possible connection and going, from the raw material to the gold dollar paid us by the foreigners for these manufactures. Labor benefits by selling its produce at home at profitable prices. The manufacturer benefits by disposing of that surplus of his output which he cannot sell at home, if he did not so sell that surplus he would not sell or retain new foreign markets. If he did not make so many goods, those he did make would cost more to manufacture (quantity tells every time), and the same consumer would have to pay still higher prices.

All the foregoing is on the assumption that the dollar stood at lower prices form, as the Democrats say, a large part of our exports of manufactures. That "large part" is purely assumption. Not a single specification has been submitted to "Ex." to prove it. On the other hand the evidence taken by our recent industrial commission did not show that we were selling at lower prices abroad than manufacturers of 1 per cent. of our total manufacture. The figures are $1,000,000 out of $12,000,000,000, or 8 cents of each $1,000 worth.

Both Were Right.

At a station on the Central the last car attached, a young passenger approached the captain, and, pointing to the distant hills, he quired: "What is that white stuff on the hills, captain?"

"That is snow, madam," answered the captain.

"Is it really?" remarked the lady. "I thought so myself, but a gentleman had just told me it was frost."—Washington Herald.

WITH PERFECT COOLNESS.

Canada Not at All Excited at the Prospect of Reciprocity Negotiations.

The Ottawa correspondence of the United States Inc. announces that the American commissioners soon will come this side to confer upon an arrangement for reciprocal trade and tariff concessions. This country, we can assure in good faith, will scrutinize Mr. Monty's Declaration with perfect coolness. On the face it bears a strong resemblance favor. Even if the promise is fulfilled with exactitude, Canadians are not likely to respond with great heartiness to the invitation.

There is, of course, a preliminary and very grave doubt as to whether such negotiations will come to anything. American politics are largely matters of interest. With the exception of the dominating industry of protection and some New England manufactures, all the large American interests remain firmly opposed to reciprocity. The recent change of front has been wrung from the administration by two local insurrections in the Republican party. In Minnesota the needs of the Minneapolis flour mills caused a desire to obtain Canadian wheat. A more serious movement has arisen in Massachusetts. Many of the industries there need cheap raw material from Canada, for table cutlery, shoes and lumber. The influence which is affecting several Massachusetts enterprises, especially the cotton trade, has caused a demand for free raw materials and an uneasy feeling in connection with the Republican party for Canadian reciprocity. This is to a conflict of interests of national extent against the wishes of two localities.

President Roosevelt's administration may be expected to do little to promote free trade between the two countries, but the protected interests are firmly intrenched in the Senate, and to the Senate any reciprocity treaty must go. The special interests of Massachusetts or of Minneapolis would weigh lightly there before the demands of the organized lumber trade, the coal-mining industry of the south, to name no one across-sore of protecting the farmers. Moreover, it is likely that the Massachusetts industries are suffering from crisis for which the granting of reciprocity would be an insufficient cure. The cotton trade, for example, is being transferred to the Southern States, where the loom of cheap coal will have to offset the advantage of the cheaper labor of the South.

The reality of the American offer this is to be distrusted. A sincere attempt might be made, a treaty might be arranged lowering the American duties, and the greater the apparent advantage to Canada the less its chance of passing the Senate. This is one aspect of the matter. Another is that there would be no guarantee of permanence. The more advantageous such a treaty would prove to Canada the greater temptation to certain elements in the United States to terminate it at a later time, the country present scheme of cultivating the British market offers no such danger. Again, Canada will not sacrifice her manufactures. The national mind is definitely made up on that point. Finally, if the United States wants our Nova Scotia coal, our New Brunswick and Ontario lumber and our Manitoba wheat, the matter is in their hands. Let them take down the tariff bars and admit them. We have done that when it suited us, as in the case of barley corn and free coal. Let the American government do likewise.—Toronto News.

A Big, Bad Blunder.

The Democrats should have waged this campaign, so far as the tariff is concerned, against the abuses, not against the policy of protection. It was a big, bad blunder to declare that "protection is robbery." It cut the party loose from any kind of sympathy with Republican tariff revisionists, and it declared a doctrine that is foreign to the views and feelings of a majority of Democrats. All the conservative utterances that followed the "robbery" declaration in the text of the platform and in Judge Parker's frank deliverances cannot undoubtedly the burst of passion.—Washington Post.

Treasury in Good Condition.

The Democrats who are trying to make campaign material out of the condition of the nation's finances are not meeting with success. The surplus for twenty days of this month exceeded the expenditures by $2,112,648. At that rate there will be a handsome surplus at the end of the fiscal year. But there is an available cash balance now in the treasury of nearly $140,000,000, exclusive of the $150,000,000 redemption fund. The treasury is in a splendid condition.—Philadelphia Press.

What the People Want.

Parker and his party say: "We can't tinor the tariff, we can't hurt the money question, we can't give up the Philippines, we can't tear Panama back to Colombia, therefore we can't do much harm if elected." The people, however, desire constructive statesmanship, and are persuaded that a lot of "can'ts" as long as the Cassidy-tion will not contribute to the welfare of the nation.—Wilkesbarre Times.

Bad for Both Farmers.

Suppose Farmer A has a large pasture lot, with an excellent crop of forage, but he is without a wood lot for his food. Farmer B, his neighbor, has an ample wood lot, but is without sufficient pasture. Now, reciprocity would be for A to allow B to pasture twenty's number of head of stock in his field while B in return allows A certain privileges in his wood lot. The Democratic free-trade idea is to tear down the fence around A's pasture and allow all cattle free access. In that case, when the A's come to B's house for the privileges of the latter's wood lot.—Toledo Blade.

FUTURE OF THE DEMOCRACY.

Massachusetts Political Party Sees Its Mission Clear.

The future of the Democracy, and by that I take it is meant the future of the Democratic party, depends largely, if not entirely, upon that party itself. The recent election in Massachusetts, wherein the Presidential candidate of the party was twice so far in a radical Democrat, each received a large plurality of the votes cast in it, an unprecedented event in the history of political parties, and it is my judgment unquestionably of the fact that a large measure of independence has always been shown in the minds of the great parties.

The Democratic party is, in my judgment, an essential part of our political organization. We should continue to be ruled by parties, and the practical side of the political game will overtake us. In the meantime, factor in selecting nominees and controlling the choice of great public officials.

To my mind the mission of the Democratic party is clear it should get back to its roots, as became a party of principle battling for reasonable and not new. Tariff reform with its necessary revision and adjustment of the trusts, should be its great aim, in my opinion, its only object at the present time. Educate the people on the subject of the tariff.

The Republican party has all along, and will, as a party, continue, until it becomes moribund, to advocate the protection. If the people are thoroughly informed on this great subject through the efforts of the Democratic party it will have performed a very great public work, and that result alone, in my judgment, should satisfy every loyal Democrat.

But it is more than probable—it is certain—that the time will come when the Democratic party, with tariff reform for its object, will, in a very true sense, become the party of protection, many of whose members are fighting for tariff reform at its hands and who are as certain to be disappointed as the sun is to rise.

The spirit of independence—and here—the opportunity of the Democratic party is found. It has been shown when from the past, and I, for one, am ready to begin work for the party of Joseph Bonaparte Hendricks Hodges Stewart and Hodges Hodges Stewart and the quarter line theirs Cecil, the quarter line, theirs Cecil, the quarter line, theirs Cecil, the quarter line,

AS HE UNDERSTOOD IT.

Salesman Had Broad Definition of the Word "Voluntary."

"Some men don't always understand what another means by the language he uses," said William F. King of the Mercantile association the other day in talking of the difficulties that salesmen sometimes have to contend with. "Now there is one of our salesmen whom I overheard the other day beseeching that a Western buyer, who is celebrated wherever salesmen congregate as a hard man to do business with, had come into the store voluntarily and bought a large bill of goods. As soon as the other man had gone I asked our man if he really meant that the buyer had come in voluntarily.

"'Sure he did,' was the reply I got.

"'How do you account for it?' I asked.

"'Oh, well,' said the salesman, 'it's simple enough. The day he arrived in town I sent him a special delivery letter at his hotel, and followed it up in the afternoon with a call at which I showed him a couple of samples. The next day I met him as he was going to lunch, and took him off to the best meal he ever ate. That night I took him to the theater, and then went home and met him at his hotel before breakfast. Of course I never let a chance slip to talk up our goods, and this morning he just walked into the store and bought the biggest bill we ever got out of him.

"'Well,' says Mr. King, 'that was what the man called coming in voluntarily, and he meant it. Of course he didn't have to hit him over the head with a club and drag him in. Every man is entitled to his own definitions.'—New York Times.

Story of Terrapin's Memory.

That Peter Terrapin has memory is proved by a story told by Young B. Hazen, who owns the birthplace of Chief Justice Taney, on Battle creek, in Calvert county.

Mr. Hazen keeps a small boat under a mulberry tree on the shore of the creek, and on going to the boat early one morning he noticed a dry leaf margin busily engaged in eating a few mulberries which had fallen. Mr. Hazen, wishing to assist Mr. Terrapin in getting his breakfast, gathered some mulberries and pitched them to him one at a time. In a very short time the terrapin began to catch the berries in his mouth exactly as they were thrown to him. Every day afterward a slight knock on the side of the boat would bring the terrapin out for his mulberries, and Mr. Hazen often took his friends and visitors to see his pet.

On one occasion a fresh young man threw a piece of tobacco to the terrapin instead of a mulberry. Mr. Terrapin retired at once in disgust, and for days afterward refused to come when called. Although Mr. Hazen finally induced him to come again for his mulberries, Mr. Terrapin remembered the tobacco, and would never approach unless Mr. Hazen was alone.—Baltimore Sun.

Tactful Suspects.

Taking an illustration out of his own calling, Dr. Gunsaulus delivered by the request of a singing society in a third of distribution of which Mrs. Leslie Carter, Miss Olga Nethersole and Miss Clara Morris are leading exemplars, with no a kind of player who is performed by some people to be doing sound emotional work when he pumps up real tears.

"I've known," he said drily, "preachers who relied so much that robust effect which they called upon that they actually did cry themselves. The tears were the responsive effect for the audience. Simplicity in music and in dramatic art belongs on the same high grade of character that makes for self-restraint in man."

An Insult to the Cow.

"We had just engaged a new cook," said the young matron. "It was going well, and as lots of little things were lying around in my room, I locked the door. Imagine my surprise when I returned to be greeted in the hall by a veritable fury impersonated by this young newly-arrived cook. She hurled all manner of violent language at me, and, surprised as I was, and incoherent as she was, I managed to make out that she had been accused of being a thief.

"Why she felt so bad about it was the puzzle. 'Why do you look your door?' she hooted. Of course, that explained it all, and, so, very gently, I asked her how she had known it was locked. She was only silent a moment in order to think up an answer. I wanted a newer, and so I went upon she was saucy, when I interrupted with: 'But that was quite wrong.' I was just about to send in an alarm when my husband came home. He did the rest. We dined out."—Philadelphia Record.

Preference for Skillfighting.

The Boston Record notes that once in a while one of the Sunday entertainers on the common startles the crowd with his bills. A well-known old gentleman was comparing the views and amusements of various countries and the relation between the two. In particular he described bullfighting in Spain and pugilism in this country. "And, I don't know but what bullfighting is the better," he roared. "Old Almighty made the bulls for bull. But when you kill a pugilist, what use is he to anybody?"

HORSE RODE TO FUNERAL.

Ironic End to Career of Hard Worked London Animal.

Hans is a true and pathetic story of a true horse. It was told to me a day or two ago by a medical friend of mine who has an extensive and popular practice in the south of London. One Sunday morning, during the last hard frost, he was asked to come round to an unusual yard as quickly as possible. It seemed that one of the horses driven in desperation by the local, had insisted on climbing into the loft, instead of taking its proper position alongside the pole. The stable-man had endeavored to get the animal out of the loft by the hoist, but poor Jerry, during the course of his struggle, had plunged its head through one of the windows and cut its neck. The doctor, unfortunately, arrived too late to be of service, with the consequence that the horse bled to death. And so it happens that the poor creature of the grim little tragedy. Even when the horse was dead the men were unable to remove the body from the inside of the stable, and thus it happened that they were compelled to harness two other horses to the vehicle and drag the corpse to the nearest carpenter shop, in order that the lines might be taken to pieces. Truly, it is better to die gloriously than to live on a life of hardship and trouble beneath. It would be interesting to know the thoughts of the other two horses on seeing their former comrade (alias, like any gentleman, through the streets of London.—The Sketch.

Dangerous Use of Arnica.

While arnica is one of the drugs included in nearly every household medicine chest, it is doubtful if the average mother, who is wont to apply it on fussy, to the fingers and toes of her little ones, realizes the risk she runs. Although many home remedies call for the use of arnica, it is said to be highly dangerous to apply it to the skin unless greatly diluted. One part arnica to five parts water, the proportions commonly advised, is safe to force a tender one and if which is intended with great danger. A correspondent who has looked up the subject says that poisoning has occurred some three ten times. "If used in full strength, she says, "arnica will cause paralysis. A good combination is that of one tablespoonful of arnica to four tablespoonfuls of witch hazel, and even then it should be used in moderation, as experience has shown."—Chicago Evening Post.

It's All in the Point of View.

"Most men," said the man of experience, "think it must be awfully nice to have a wife who takes things as easily as Have Faith's wife takes them, but others, more discriminating would prefer a good, honest row to her quiet equanimity. The way she helped the other day when she found a letter in Dave's pocket from some girl over in Brooklyn is an example of her quiet equanimity.

"'I don't see,' was the Tragic Muse from Long Island, 'how on earth I can ever live without you.'

"Dave's wife read that gush and a lot more just like it without ever turning a hair.

"'Well,' she said, coolly, that girl is a fool. If she knew you as well as I do she would be wondering how on earth she could ever live with you.

"And that, in the opinion of the discriminating few, was a whole lot deeper than a common, everyday rumpus."—New York Press.

Czar Knew His Subjects.

Illustrative of the czar's lack of confidence in the Russians who surround him is the following incident: Czar Nicholas I. had some trouble with his bark and his dispatch-carrying message treatment. But Nicholas determined himself unable to find a single man whom he dared trust for the simple operation. He sent to Frederick William IV. of Prussia, asking that a few noncommissioned officers of the Prussian guards might be allowed to wait upon him. The application was granted, and the officers acted as messengers and returned to Berlin laden with rich presents. "I know my Russians," Nicholas told them. "So long as I can look them in the face everything is well, but I will not risk letting them work behind my back."

A new church has been erected by the Roman Catholic congregation at Stignacon and will be dedicated by Bishop Eis on Jan. 15. The entire cost of stone and brick at a cost of $20,000, supersedes what is probably the oldest church structure in the Upper Peninsula. This fine edifice for the better part of a century, having been erected in 1841. The original edifice was a log structure which was subsequently covered with clapboards and later was otherwise enlarged and enlarged.

On Thursday morning of last week the large boarding house at the Ward Estate at Dewatt was discovered to be on fire, and burned to the ground with most of its contents. The fire is supposed to have caught in the chimney and before it was discovered the smoke had filled the house so much that it was with difficulty that all of the boarders were aroused and got out in safety. There were but four with boarders at the place at this time as the logging camp at the big mill had been into off some time before, and the men had gone to the camps. The burning was of frame three stories in height, and was a total loss. What insurance was carried is not known.

Chas. Garrison, aged 15, employed about the Cameron Lumber company's sawmill at Central Lake, tried riding on a chain conveyer from the yard into the mill. It appears that this feat has been successfully accomplished at different times by other boys who, when the chain reached the pulley at the top of the incline, slid off on the floor of the mill. Garrison's foot caught in a revolving shaft at the critical moment and for some moments he was whirled about in an opening so narrow that the his head and then his body thrusted against the solid frame work of the structure. At length the mill was stopped and Garrison, apparently dead, was extricated from his position. Strange to say, no bones were broken, but his internal injuries are such that recovery is impossible.

It is now told that the duke of Manchester's bear was a "plant." All unknown to the duke the brute had been by pre-arrangement, put where it was found and so doughtily slain by him. This is the sequel of the story of the great bear hunt in the woods near Central Lake, the first installment of which was related with real enthusiasm to Mayor McGlynn of Detroit lately by the duke himself. The real story was to good to keep and a friend of one of the Cole's encourage during his Northern Michigan trip, has been tipping it off in confidence to his own friends. The great hunt in the wilds of Chaneville was planned by Passenger Agent Moeller, of the Pere Marquette. He arranged to have the Zimmerman princess car, with the duke and duchess and some others, taken up on the Lincoln & Mackinaw road to the vicinity of Central Lake. It has been arranged for the party to drive in on a stretch of near named Fisher. When the visitors got there to all appearances they were upon the hardest kind of luck. The cabin seemed to be destitute of provisions. They hunted around and finally uncovered potatoes and other edibles, the hidden store gradually increasing. The duchess turned to and cooked the meal for the party. Then somebody "found" a stock of hidden champagne with which to finish the dinner. Then the hunters were aroused and got out in safety. There were but four with boarders at the place at this time as the logging camp at the big mill had been into off some time before, and the men had gone to the camps. The burning was of frame three stories in height, and was a total loss. What insurance was carried is not known.

—During the past year eighty-nine eminate granges have been organized in Michigan, with a membership of 6,000. There are now over 50,000 of the order in Michigan.

—Congressman Darragh's majority at the late election was some 21,000. This is the largest majority accorded to any congressman in Michigan, except in the big twelfth district in the upper peninsula.

—Snowshoed men along the great lakes claim that the board of supervising inspectors, which formulated the new inspection rules, has gone to extremes. Some strenuous kicking will be done at the meeting at Buffalo Jan. 7.

—Harvey Campbell, who went to Ann Arbor last week, to have his eye treated, accompanied his father, Capt. P. H. Campbell, that his eye must be removed. The eye was injured last fall by an iron splinter while Mr. Campbell was working as engineer of the steamer Silver Spray.

—At a meeting of captains and mates held at Cleveland Wednesday night, it was decided to perfect a new organization. Members declare nothing has been done towards affiliating with the Lake Seamens' union of the International Longshoremens, Marine and Transport Workers' association.

—The tug C. M. Dyer and the steam barge Mackinaw, constituting a part of the Ralston Wrecking Co. outfit, was in port Friday night, on their way from Detroit to Two Rivers to work on the steamer Continental, which is stranded there. —Landlord Ferguson is giving the old reliable Ferguson House a thorough renovating and re-decorating "Billy" and his wife are the founders of this good old place, and when they are at the helm it is a guarantee that its patrons will be hospitably received and well cared for.

—During the season of navigation ended a week ago thirty million dollars worth of copper, all from the Michigan mines on the Keweenawan mineral formation in Keweenaw, Houghton and Ontonagon counties, passed through the Sault Ste. Marie ship canals en route for the east. Although there was 100,000 net tons of the red metal, at 14 cents per pound, valued at $280 per ton, or an aggregate of $30,000,000.

The board of supervisors met Monday and organized by the election of J. H. Graff, of South Arm, as chairman. The session will probably close tonight. At the court house during the week the outgoing and incoming county officers have been busy taking inventories and "shifting responsibility." All officers qualified Tuesday afternoon. Frank McWain, of Boyne City, will be retained by Sheriff Coulter as Under-Sheriff. To-day the new order of things is in full force.

—It is reported on good authority that the Pere Marquette will return to its former train schedule next Sunday. The present arrangement, which was made at the solicitation of the Petoskey board of trade, to gather outside trade for Petoskey merchants, has been a decided failure. During December there were less Petoskey tickets sold at the Charlevoix station than during any previous month of the year. The Petoskey merchants have gone to large expense, in printing and other advertising, and have failed to reap the desired harvest.

—At a recent session of the State Grange the assembled farmers put themselves on record as friends of the beautiful and interesting bird, the quail, and for strictly practical reasons. It has been found that the quail is a staunch friend of the agriculturist, owing to the fact that he helps to keep down noxious insects, also weeds and on the principle that one good turn deserves another, the grangers will seek to have the mantle of the law thrown over "bob White" for a period of five years at least, and some were in favor of taking him out of the game bird list altogether.

—A meeting of the executive committee of the Standard Cement Co. was held in the company's office in this village Friday. There were present president Fred. H. Aldrich, of Detroit; S. E. Symonds, of Symonds Bros. wholesale hardware dealers, Saginaw; E. H. Bellows, of Bellows Bros. lumbermen of Frankfort; H. M. Lockhart, of Frankfort; C. L. Judd, of this place, who is secretary of the company, and Robert F. Wentz, of Detroit, consulting and constructing engineer of Detroit. President Aldrich stated that the plant is in fine condition and that all plans heretofore made public will be fully carried out.

—The steamer Beaver went to the Island Tuesday, and made a landing at McGinnis's old dock at the point. She will make one more trip and lay up.

—Peter McGaffety and Mike Green, of this place, have taken the contract of carrying the Beaver Island mail. They will use the tug Maggie, and will carry the mail as long as they can touch any spot on the Island.

—During the gale of Monday more than two miles of fish nets, valued at $10,000, which were set in the lake by St. Joseph fishermen more than a week ago, it is feared are lost, having been carried north by the rough sea, and it is believed they will never be located by the owners.

—Attorney General Blair has filed in the Supreme court an application for a writ of quo warranto for the purpose of inquiring into the right of the Booth Packing company of Chicago to transact business in this state. Behind this application is the Western Fish company of Detroit, which claims that the Booth company is a trust within the meaning of the statutes and that it should be deprived of the right to do business in this state.

—After being tossed about on a raging sea for thirty six hours and having been in imminent danger of going to the bottom the larger part of the time, the Ann Arbor carferry No. 3 reached Menominee Saturday in a badly battered condition and the passengers were on the verge of collapse. The boat left Frankfort in fine weather, but a few hours after leaving port a terrific blow came up. The cars on the car deck became loosened and were saved from going into the sea with great difficulty. A casting weighing twenty five tons on one of the cars was broken from its fastenings and swung partly around, crushing the smoke stack and exhaust pipe, as well as doing considerable other damage. Every man on the boat was called to help the crew across the great mass of iron, and finally succeeded in getting it back of the ship. As a last resort Captain Robinson threw the boat into the trough of the sea while the casting was lashed to the car. At death's door the boat stayed all night to give the crew a chance to further secure the great casting. To get into port it was necessary to cut in two several inches thick to two inches.

Lorraine's Sense of Courtesy.

The East Jordan Enterprise, published by C. L. Lorraine, last week published the letter of Judge of Probate J. M. Harris, reviewing the affairs of his office, in reply to statements made by the Enterprise. In commenting on the publication of Judge Harris' letter, Lorraine says:

"We give space to the above extended and laborious dissertation on the probate office in Charlevoix county, at the request of Probate Judge J. M. Harris, as it purports to be addressed only to the attention of the Enterprise in the last campaign, overlooking the marked discussion shown in having it published in the other county paper before approaching the Enterprise.

Yes! The same editor last fall made certain statements concerning the official record of Prosecuting Attorney Nicholas, which a Charlevoix jury last week decided were libelous.

Fearing that he would be charged with "marked discourtesy" by Lorraine Mr. Nicholas tendered the Enterprise a written statement of the facts in contradiction with the case in point that paper has charged ever against.

The editor flatly refused to publish the statement or anything else that would lead to refute his false statements. Who committed the "marked discourtesy" here?

Judge Harris should, in the future, be more careful in his dealings with people who have seen keen sense of personal and journalistic courtesy as C. L. Lorraine.

Traverse City Record.

A dispatch in yesterday's papers describing the shooting of a man in Saginaw by a man who gave his name as George O'Neil of Traverse City, caused some alarm among the friends of Geo. H. O'Neal of this city. It is supposed that Mr. O'Neal had gone to Saginaw to spend Christmas with his daughter, therefore his friends who knew of his journey were worried, although none believed that Mr. O'Neal would be mixed up in an affair of that kind. A telegram from O'Neal to Ed. Watt this morning stated that the party arrested for the crime had assumed the name of George O'Neil.

PORT ARTHUR FALLS.

Gen. Stoessel Surrenders to Gen. Nogi New Year's Day.

Acknowledging the uselessness of further resistance, Gen. Stoessel surrendered Port Arthur to the Japanese commander Sunday, which is most tremendous and far reaching event in the history of the war, and closes a siege that will go into history as the greatest struggle in the history of modern warfare.

The Japanese, who in 1894 took Port Arthur from China only to give it up at the demand of a coalition of European powers, lost again in 1904, it, this time from Russia and despite the fact that Russia had expended her best energies for years in making it impregnable.

General Stoessel was given command of the fortress early before the hostilities with Japan began at midnight, Feb. 8, 1904, with the attack of Admiral Togo's torpedo boats on the Russian squadron lying in Port Arthur harbor. On Feb. 24 Togo made his first attempt to block the entrance to the harbor by sinking three four steamships. On March 17 the torpedo boat Sazeri was blown up by a mine. On Feb. 23 Togo made his second attempt to block the harbor entrance.

On May 1 the first land operations against the fortress began with the landing of General Oku's army at Takwa and Kinchou on the Liao Tung peninsulas. These troops cut the railroad and telegraph communications. On May 26 came the battle of Nanshan Hill which cost the Japanese hosts of relief from General Kuropatkin. On August 2 the Japanese met closing in on Port Arthur and captured Port Shan-Tai-Kow. On August 10 the Port Arthur squadron made its first sortie and was driven back with loss. Seven days later Gen. Nogi made his first demand for Port Arthur's surrender. On Nov. 3, the mikado's birthday, Gen. Nogi made a desperate attempt to take the fortress by storm, but was repulsed with a report loss of forty thousand men. On Nov. 30 he captured 203 Meter Hill, which proved the key to the situation, and there with heavy siege guns destroyed the remainder of the Port Arthur fleet. On Jan. 1 General Stoessel sent a flag of truce with offer to surrender.

The fall of Port Arthur must have a most depressing effect on the Russians, and will doubtless stimulate the peace party up further among the Russian people, that the war was unjustified.

Another probable result will be the return of the Baltic fleet, as with Port Arthur lost, the further advance of the Russian admiral would be extremely hazardous.

A New Deal Promised.

General Manager William Cotter of the Pere Marquette system is on an inspection trip over the road. To a Grand Rapids reporter he said:

"I hardly think it is fair to hold the present management responsible for the results which have been brought about through a condition which was not caused by it.

"The last position which I am desirous of being placed in, is an attitude of criticising my predecessors, but the condition which we are facing today is a condition which was brought about long before we had anything to say as to the working of this system. We know what we are endeavoring to do and if any criticism is due on for our actions or our failure to produce good results, it will only be just to advance such criticism after we have been given ample time in which to demonstrate whether or not we are worthy of public confidence and approval.

"I am a new man and the same can be truthfully said as regards General Superintendent Timmy, in our relations to the Pere Marquette. Mr. Timmy had been for a year and a half assistant general manager, but this is the first time I have seen him. In the morning, Dr. F. H. Whitmore sang with good effect the appropriate solo: "Two in Twos" and Rev. A. W. Vickers preached on "Our Guide." At night Mr. Samuel Marting rendered with his usual taste and feeling the solo: "Nearer My God to Thee."

The pastor opened a series of services to be held in connection with the week of prayer preaching on "The right choice." These services are being held each evening except Saturday and will probably continue next week.

There will be preaching service at the Episcopal church, on Sunday, at 2 o'clock p. m.

The Judicial Nomination.

The people of the 13th Judicial Circuit will be called upon, at the annual spring election, to elect a judge to succeed Hon. Fred W. Mayne, whose term of office will expire.

The exigencies of politics, even in that phase of politics which embraces the judicial ermine, usually evolves numerous local candidates, and we presume the canvas will be no exception to that rule.

But, viewing the subject from the dual standpoint of merit and precedent, there is no reason why Judge Mayne should not receive the republican nomination to succeed himself. First of all, Judge Mayne is solid in his own county. He has the unanimous endorsement and support of the Charlevoix county bar, and is the choice of the republicans of the county, if, indeed, we may not say, of the people of the county, regardless of party.

Judge Mayne's record on the bench for six years will bear the closest scrutiny. In supreme court the record with the 13th circuit reads as well as it does with any other circuit in the State. Sitting upon the bench Judge Mayne has known neither friend nor foe. He has been absolutely independent, nurturing not one ambition and that to fill out to the fullest an exact measure of justice to the litigant who came into his court, either as a litigant or malefactor. He has demonstrated to the highest degree his possession of what is known as the "judicial acumen." To the former conferees of the bar he has been the same genial gentleman as when a practicing attorney, and, while at all times appreciating the dignity of his high position, austerity or arrogance have never trenched upon the even tenor of his official conduct.

And, while preserving all these traits, which ornament the character of a judge, there has come to his knowledge—for Judge Mayne has been during these years of judicial experience a student. He has not applied himself more diligently or conscientiously to the books of professional practice than he has the long deep and brought up much good, true metal. Judge Mayne was a good judge at his first term of court; he has been a better judge every year since. Fred W. Mayne has honored the bar, and he is now an honor to the bench.

Charlevoix county will present his name to the judicial convention as a candidate to succeed himself, and its representatives will go there taking with them the name of an honest, fearless and able judge.

The Old and New Year at the M. E. Church.

The Watchnight service which until recently has been looked upon as a distinctively Methodist institution, adopted from the Moravian church, is now generally observed in our cities, by both Protestant and Catholic churches. Such a service was held at the Methodist church on Saturday night, from nine to twelve o'clock.

A congregation of fifty was in attendance, the greater part adults. The first hour and a half was given up to the young people and was efficiently led by Miss Ella Weeks. Suitable selections were given from the Scriptures, the poets and prose writers. A solo was sung by Mr. Airby. The entire service was impressive. After a brief recess, the pastor took charge, preaching from text, "God requireth that which is past." A few moments were spent in silent prayer while the bell tolled the last strokes of the dying year.

As the bell rang out its welcome for the New Year, all joined in singing the Doxology.

The New Year's services were the were the most largely attended of any under the present ministry. In the morning, Dr. F. H. Whitmore sang with good effect the appropriate solo: "Two in Twos" and Rev. A. W. Vickers preached on "Our Guide." At night Mr. Samuel Marting rendered with his usual taste and feeling the solo: "Nearer My God to Thee."

The pastor opened a series of services to be held in connection with the week of prayer preaching on "The right choice." These services are being held each evening except Saturday and will probably continue next week.

By H. W. TAYLOR

CHAPTER V.

The depth of the side revine and the phenomenal height of the great trees of this primeval forest of Infinion, together constituted an inclosure so high walled as to shut out all sights save itself and antiles of sky, black-veined with the great oak limbs, and painted with touches of green leaves.

The moss, and sides of the long "hollow," and the dense canopy of over hanging leafy tiger shade boughs, had prevented the two adventurers from feeling by and-bye the sighing hot breath and "natural-unhealthiness" of the stress storm, as Mr Mason put it.

Now that they and confined the very cream of the "vapor" and come down to rest of "open ground, perhaps two or three acres in extent, in which those were from some unknown cause but a few large oak trees which scattered, they were suddenly aware that they could run the length and back, exhaust themselves and longwise compel the large mental tension quite comfortable. At the end they paused, leaned in each other's faces, and laughed.

"I'm afraid you are an alarmist, Mr. Mason. Why, this is a drop of rain falling yet. And there is not even the most distant rumble of thunder although that cloud is black enough as to its wings, and seems to be heading this way from it can reach us? See what a light space right in the middle of the cloud. You can almost see the blue sky through it. Now I know you are a joker."

She looked round as Mr Mason said was perhaps a little out of her sight. With his yellow straw hat pulled back down upon the back of his head and his deeadedly an long, she thought—he was wonderfully good looking—and his shirt sleeves rather basty, broad chest turned for her to look at, and his face turned back to meet determined resistance or Sarah winces.

His face, as he spoke to the lackness, was very serious, and the little wrinkles were visible at the corners of his eyes when he smiled, as he now did, without the least fearing that pose of consideration for her.

Looking at him then, three years spent Library Hall, and the Sundays spent in great deal of something—who had no serious thought of it—he was thinking what a fine fellow—in the strong, determined, dishonest sense.

He was seemed to feel instant to be revealed to her in a tender way and he going place, as it revealed by his great he glance, and, and attention in a horizontal line from one to rim of the visible heavens, five what looked cloud the immutable fleck of wild gaiety such as one, in a fine day, is to place the white. Dark, by contrast is an almost unknown.

"When is it? When are they?" she said in a tone of extreme curiosity.

A vast tormented roar began to sweep from twigs of the tallest poplars, the the kite tremble. High up in its rear break waves began to be visible, and it is a growing fury.

"Look! look! he said, pointing to the edge of the wood. "There is the answer to your question."

As he spoke a cloud of brown, dust leaves around it rise up from the edge of the forest like a widely covey of whirling quails frightened of the sp pounch of the huntsmen of the upper air, and flew away to the hills for safe-ty. And then, with a roar, the great oak leaves little edge of poplar and oak, and pines of the less far outreaches of the southwark, dropped down them.

Leaves lost the place, as if pressing for a mighty blow, to attack upon all the hardest resistance, and, and then the whole universe seemed smitten with one roaring, stunning crash, that filled as upon with the darkness of flying leaves and twigs, and branches, and limbs, and stinging gravel, and the crushing, and rushing, and groaning of mighty Pines and Oaks.

Show by something in her ear that she was utterly unable to distinguish, he stood her alone the worse and literally dropped her into the pit behind the Ka-pitic and beating tarpaulin. In all, that he was at her side, and have his stretched frame could be distinguished even in the extra age of the crashes, and the redoubling crash of splintering trees.

Now, help me with the rest of the pit it is alone level. Don't you to move, he was quite comfortable. At the time he paused, leaned in each other's faces, and laughed.

"I'm afraid you are an alarmist, Mr. Mason. Why, this is a drop of rain falling yet. And there is not even the most distant rumble of thunder although that cloud is black enough as to its wings, and seems to be heading this way from it can reach us? THE POPULAR PULPIT

HOME AND FAMILY.

By Prof. W. F. Black

Last subject: Sabbath Observance—Psalms 92.

There are three forms of human society, first, the family, second, civil, third, religious. The binding force of society in the family is love, the cement connecting its parts is the sense of the necessity for mutual help, the type is the family.

The fundamental principles of the family are found in the Eden and man. The family owes its rise and stability to the marriage relation, which entered into the mind of one author of Nature. Love is the cement which should be renewed without decreasing the strength, so let every believer and pastor exercise this influence in the home. Marriage is the union of three distinct

OLD MEN OF FAMOUS NAME.

Authors Who Were Productive After Three Score and Ten.

The tall, handsome, white-bearded Oliver Wendell at the ripe age of but two months of years old. The professor, "poet at 25 says the Recorder Boston Post, the second part when he was and wrote some at his poetical prime at 75. Six of our foremost American poets—and all poets, in a manner as well as in quality of verse—Bryant, Whittier, Longfellow, Lowell, Holmes and Emerson—lived to ripe ages, ranging from 70 to 86, and were productive in the time. Holmes wrote in his eighty-fifth year; Bryant, alas and thrown the old man so often with the earth as with the heavens; yet he wrote brilliant verse for special occasions almost to his end.

Tennyson, Moulton, the last-named, a man of almost indefatigable energy and considerable fame, supplanted in his Rabbinically and last year the in ever at a time in middle life.

The card of Democrat, Bennett, he was a great, if not wise and his whole life was a series of quixotic—long to be remembered as the noble and generous man who was in the history of the world of journalism. Bennett was a man of great ability, of great energy, of great generosity, of great and of the highest order of journalistic ability. He was a man who was in the prime of life when he died, and who had the history of the world before him. Bennett was a man of great ability, of great energy, of great and of the highest order of journalistic ability. He was a man who was in the prime of life when he died, and who had the history of the world before him.

Dr. Charles James Napier, the hero of Scinde, was by nature he had any great statesman. He fought and won and battles, and conquered provinces—and—and achieved a great name in the world. Clive and Hastings also were great statesmen, but Napier was a man of great ability, of great energy, of great and of the highest order of journalistic ability. He was a man who was in the prime of life when he died, and who had the history of the world before him.

Writer Says Genius Is Insanity.

Answering to Mrs. Kate Upson Clark's war for her husband, Mrs. Clark, a widow, is sorry. The poet's wife, says Mrs. Clark in a letter to the Boston Herald, was never at after the first week, and more than the poet's son for full. Mrs. Clark, walks to call of the neighbors lately passed her husband's death, and thought of her husband's then his friends. Then he lingered on to death in sympathy and honor for it in the views and conclusions of the mistress, and if he is tormented by family feuds it. The sufferer should not worry. A woman who has husband and his art, lives in a moment, is forced to a sense of the poet's mind at the time is a world of long experience. It is hard to realize the force of a genius, and continue to ordinary rules. These geniuses, remarkable are in fact insane in the common sense of certain. The irresponsible imperfections must be to eliminate terms and in art.

Society to Teach Hygiene.

A new association the institute of Hygiene, which London Tribune says, is to of London, having for its object the dissemination of knowledge of the subject of personal and domestic hygiene. It aims to be self-supporting, and will be formally inaugurated by a commitment exhibition of appliances for the sanitary protection of health, sanitary fitting, cooking stoves, and a special annex devoted to trade and medical and surgical appliances. Lectures and demonstrations are contemplated. The society hopes that the same plan will be adopted by provincial work, which will take the form of visits, meetings with experiments and contributions.

Versatile English Nobleman.

Lord Kinnaird, of England, already a peer, is now to succeed his father as chief of Clan Gregor, and has also the hereditary hereditary title. This nobleman is versatile. He is a famous player of the game of football, the sport of Hampton, he are of the Scottish Wanderers. Though the duke of Argyll is the Scottish peer, he is a member of the Scottish Wanderers, Lord Kinnaird, the peer and "Lord Lyon," has created a sensation by a unusual break of which the old clan will be proud, glamour for a dribbling game, and not one of the Argyle Scots, Lord Kinnaird, the peer, is a member of the Scottish Wanderers.

Its Value.

Referring to the reciprocity platform of the Massachusetts Republicans the "Philadelphia Press" makes the following curious comment:

"There are various ways of working up the problem. It can be done by treaties. It can be done by a maximum and minimum tariff. It can be done by giving executive discretion within limits. It can be done by commissions. The means can then be easily determined. The time of the Massachusetts declaration is that it recognizes reciprocity as a practical and immediate problem."

FIGHT PRESENT BILL.

NEW MEXICO AND ARIZONA OBJECT TO STATEHOOD PLEASURE.

Wish to Become States Without Losing Identities and Have Robert Goodwin Officer Thrust—Controlled St. Louis Man Give Themselves Up.

Neither of the two territories for which the joint statehood bill was passed by Congress according to the N. Y. Herald, New Mexico and Arizona, Thomas Murphy of Arizona, who was in Washington the other night, this event has been in Washington fighting the measure and Mr. Murphy was on his way to the capital to work against its passage. They are the people of these States and Congress are opposed to the bill because it would not take cognizance of their identity. Both territories are unwilling to become States with their identities lost in the commonwealth and that is why neither of them wants the joint bill to stand as it now stands. Mr. Murphy said that the people of Arizona are willing to be made a State, but they do not want to be forced to United States Marshal Morey of St. Louis and have thrust on them as State lieutenant an Indian City, to have his name coupled with the Indian, to accept their citizenship, qualifications and requirements for a seat of labor upon Congress for a seat of labor upon Harvard Football Player Receives His Inheritance.

Since the Harvard football eleven was getting ready for its game with Yale last November, there was a man on the squad whose guy, although on footing, was steady and whose persistent smile finally gained him a place of good cheer. Frederick Hall Willis, '06, who played on Harvard's freshman team two years ago, and who had been in the university after an absence of two years. The other day Willis attained his majority and with his twenty-first birthday came a fortune of $3,000,000, inherited from his father, and of which he assumes the control and management after attaining his majority, by the terms of the testament of his father. Willis will say nothing concerning his fortune, but was ready and willing to talk football, and said: "I was his father, who followed football, and I was a member of the football team one of the fortunate finders who followed the opposite eleven everywhere during the season fall. While first year football was prominent two years ago, when Yale lost to the Maine week and we brought back this civilization again, and Harvard gained. And football is a game, although he was not a member of the team, and the strategy is great.

DIE IN FIRE CLAY MINE.

Furnace Suddenly Inflames Four Outside Causes Death of Four.

Four men were suffocated in the No. 2 gulf clay mine of the Rose Hominy Fire Brick Company near Holtrop, Pa. The victims were Americans. Four men had been employed in the mine and all but one were colored, though they were all in good shape and two Americans are likely to die. The cause of the disaster was most peculiar. A small building about high burned down at the mouth of the mine. The air shaft from the mine ran within a few feet of the building and ran at a sort of line and drew into the drift the heat and smoke from the fire, thus suffocating the men. The damage was done at 10 in the morning. As soon as it could be done the burning shanty was torn away and the fire extinguished. The men who were in the mine and who were suffocated by the heat and smoke and others were in a dying condition. The men died while on the way out and another after they had reached the fresh air. The men were not buried in any way. It is supposed that the fire was started by a miner who lost out to the dangers to get his dinner. The building was valued at $1,000 and carried some of the Rose family, who lost their all in the fire.

MAMMOTHS NOT ALL LARGE.

Contrary to Supposition They Were Often Smaller Than Jumbo

The fine specimen of the tusks and palate of an imperial mammoth has recently been acquired by the American Museum of Natural History, New York. The specimen was discovered in the sands of western Texas, and the tusks are little short of the largest yet described among either living or fossil members of the elephant family. In an absolute sense, the tusks measure 16 feet 6 inches from the base to the tips and there is at least a foot broken away from the end, making a total estimated length of 14 feet 6 inches.

The length of this mammoth must have been at least twelve feet, or about two feet higher than that of the famous African elephant Jumbo, the skeleton of which is in the same museum. Very few mammoths reached this size and the majority were decidedly smaller than Jumbo. Several more or less entire carcasses of mammoths have been discovered in Siberia, and one was so well preserved that it has been stuffed and mounted like a modern mammoth in the Imperial museum at St. Petersburg. When the Siberian mammoth was dry land, and Great Britain part of a peninsula, the mammoth lived in England and its fossil remains are not only found on the land, but are represented by hundreds of mammoth teeth dredged from the depths of the North Sea by trawlers. The American mammoth was a native of the mammoth, but differed from it in being more massive and somewhat lower. No entire remains of a mammoth have been discovered, but from those available it is possible to obtain a good idea of what the animal was like in life.—Detroit Tribune.

Central African Lakes Drying Up.

In 1899, some distance southeast of Lake Nyasa, in central Africa, Livingstone discovered Lake Shirwa, a lake of water about thirty miles long and fifteen miles wide, which has now entirely disappeared with the exception of a few pools. Lake Nyasa, discovered by Livingstone at the same time, has also disappeared. The cause of the disease appears to be a gradual drying up of bodies of water in parts of Africa. As marking the existence of a single battlemotory the remains stand there a reproof of mutation in those inland waters not regarded elsewhere in the contemporary newspaper's survey, though the surfaces of dark lake in Utah is also very remarkable.

College Boards of Honor.

Government of college students by boards of honor is successful. The last report is of a Princeton freshman who cheated at an examination and was promptly expelled by the board of honor. All of whose members are students. His name was suppressed in order that he may not be permanently "plastered." This plan of relying upon the sense of the students in most of the detective ability of the industry has always been in force at the University of Virginia, and of late years it has been introduced into Northern colleges. A system that develops a fine sense of honor is worth more than all the text-books can teach.

But I am arranging to leave you a third of my property so that you can embellish your automobile with all the latest improvements."

Now Get Together!

The SENTINEL has said so much along the line of Charlevoix business men getting together and pulling together that some of the town that we have the courage to be tiresome. But we proposed to keep pounding away at the subject, hoping that something would wake our people up to the necessity.

Now, a start is being made in the direction of organized effort for the mutual good. Horace Gloyer said concerning the consumption of sperie payment. "The way to resume is to resume." Now, the way to organize is to organize. Let it be done in no half-hearted way. Let the council hall be filled with those who propose to put their shoulders to the wheel and push.

There is very much to be done, and very much that can be done, and the way to do it, is to do it. Let us do what we can during the winter so good hard work for Charlevoix.

IN SOUTH AMERICAN REPUBLICS.

Two Are Becoming Powerful Civilized Nations, Says Writer.

For nearly years the South American republics have been a byword in strife, tyranny and anarchy the determined efforts made by the presidential assumption of rule by popular suffrage seem for such somewhat like a winter in the London Chronicle, and yet the two most powerful civilized nations of the continent are undoubtedly two other there are now emerging at least two powerful civilized nations which are bound the way to peace and prosperity, that even Venezuela, be least remarkable of them all, must finally infuse.

The Argentine and the Argentine Republic, the former with its immense seaboard and varied climate the latter with the Pampas to the north and high upland, study done with resolutions, and are advancing with great strides.

Bolivia, cooped up in the Andes and deprived of its sea port, holds within her rocky bounds wealth beyond the dreams of Ophir, yet memorable for want of much. Colombia with its vast Llanos valleys of fertility unknown beside, and its Atlantic frontage also late in their career; Brazil, with its thousands of miles of unexplored life, tributaries of forests and waterways, Peru, with its lost mine still more haunted—these, may all the minor than Argentina and Chile the wealth that comes quickly but they are for the future rather than the present and their best hope is in the stability and security as the two leading republics are now rapidly coming.

"All Boys Steal."

Speaking to the Congress of Mothers Mrs. A. E. Hagerty, who as chief probation officer of the juvenile court, has had most experience with youthful offenders, rather startled her hearers by her somewhat severe remarks on boyish honesty. "I have discovered," she said, "that there is no man living, no matter how devoted he may be in his mature years, who was not guilty of stealing in his boyhood. You know, each man's brother of my own family whether he ever did any stealing when a boy, and the answer must be invariably and frankly, him in the affirmative. Even my own husband told me by telling me that small, when he was a little boy, he stole all the salted almonds I had prepared to serve at a luncheon. I've come to the conclusion that there's no such thing as an honest boy."—Philadelphia Record.

Live in Sunshine.

Always remember that the sun shines nearly all day from the south half a day—the first half—from the east, and the other half from the west; but never from the north. Plant a new house so as to be in close relation to the highway, outwards, flatwise, or obliquely. It makes no difference. Even turn it entirely around, so that the front door is where the rear door usually is, upon the opposite side to the approach, but, above everything, make sure that the daylight is going to do for your living rooms and bedrooms all it will do, for the bright sunshine of America is our choicest inheritance, and no American can be truly happy for long without it.—The House Beautiful.

Just Casual Observations.

A gentleman remarked to me during recess: "What a guy this that the upper river was not dammed so, so only day for water power." It may be, but an unbiased view of the matter will bear other impressions. It is a waste of time and gas, matter to discuss that question now but—

There are very few people in Charlevoix who know that the project was considered in 1899 or 1900. Dr. C. Leach, who at that time owned considerable land here, proposed to Hon. John S. Dixon, who was the original owner of the site of the village of Charlevoix, that the upper river be dammed. It could have been done at that time, as there were very few settlers on Pine Lake, who would have been affected by raising the water of Pine Lake. Mr. Dixon, as Mr. Leach told the writer of this, thought favorable of the proposition at first, but finally said that he would talk with Phoebe (Mrs. Dixon) about the matter." Mrs. Dixon objected, and the thing fell through. We shall not here discuss what "might have been" had Mr. Leach's ideas been carried out.

Again in 1904, when it was proposed to excavate an artificial channel from Pine to Round Lake, there were those in Charlevoix who strenuously opposed the idea, but a majority of interests, including those of the upland settlers, demanded the channel and, was duly the SENTINEL was emphatic in advocacy of the project, and published the call for a "force" to start the work. We well remember the day when teams and men came from all directions and began the excavation of the canal which is now the government channel between the harbor and Pine Lake. We will remember the day when after a shallow current of water had been diverted into the new cut, the tug Commodore Nye, with Capt. Fit Dutcher at the wheel, backed into the little stream and began to "kick" toward Round Lake. Previous to this day, the Conn. Nye had proved the Fox & Oil wend power through the various channel that now constitutes the "picturesque local rendezvous of the Chicago clubs. It took a good many days of tug dredging to make a navigable channel through the new cut, but finally Congressman Avery secured an order from the War Department including it in the harbor work, and now the government officially designates the work as "Charlevoix Harbor and the entrance to Pine Lake."

Another gentlemen recently remarked: "If Charlevoix had, instead of locating resorts here scattered and held the sites for manufacturing purposes the town would have been better off today." We approach this subject with some trepidation. There are two sides to it. What the gentleman said may be true; but we are of the opinion that it could not be true to any large extent only as corollary to the 1866 dam proposition. It is only a matter of speculation, anyway. We don't care to even guess as to "what might have been." As to what is, there are some things self-evident. The uninformed and uninfluenced are apt to speak of the resort business as a three months period of activity. This is an error. It is true that the period of "fever heat" in the resort business is confined to three months,—three months of barrooms, kiosks, automobiles, niggers and duds, with the numerical preponderance of decent, God-fearing people. But to Charlevoix the resort business is a nine months active industry. During these nine months there are more men employed, embracing skilled and unskilled labor, as a direct result of the resorts of Charlevoix, than are required to operate the largest saw mill in Charlevoix county, and the industry has much greater promise of permanence and growth.

But, we are led to observe, manufacturing industries and resorts are not necessarily antagonistic to each other, if we continue to have a due regard for the "general fitness of things." The sawdust nuisance, the sugar factory or the cement plant do not trench upon conditions necessary to a successful resort town. We would not have a glue factory or a tannery against the boundary of a resort if we could. We would keep the resorts and create the dinner pails.

NORTHERN MICHIGAN.

John Darrow, age 76, of Harbor Springs, is dead at the asylum. He has been an inmate of the institution for several years. A pathetic feature is that his wife has also been an inmate for some time, but neither knew that the other was there, the authorities not thinking it best to inform them. She does not know her husband is dead.

Kalkaska Leader. The Alpena, Oxford and Western R. R. project, or rather the management of the same is getting broody again and has gone along to the point of a blue print showing where it proposes to go some time, if not sooner. The blue print will come next. If the project now several years old does not succumb to so some of the numerous claims and ments that carry off so many promising railroad ventures.

At Traverse City this week an Indian agent was distributing green point money to Indians of Ottawa, treaty descent. Thirty-seven will receive $25.20 each. Among them are two sons of old Chief Agoma, of Northport. There are only 200 members of the tribe living, among which $7500 are being distributed. The Indians here claim they belong to the Ottawas, thinking Pottawatomie blood is the greater, but government money comes of this idea.

Petoskey News: The proposed electric railway between this city and Charlevoix is arousing a great deal of talk and enthusiasm in the latter city, reports from there stating that a great deal of interest in the project has been aroused. A survey of the route has practically been made. A railroad of this kind would not only develope the intervening county but connect the two cities, but as the proposed route lies along the shores of the inland lakes, would be a valuable attraction and mode of entertainment for our numerous summer visitors.

Deputy Attorney General Chase has been notified by the register of deeds of Emmet county that Sammy L. Peterson and wife of New York, who recently gave the New York land company a deed of a section in Lake Michigan outside the United States member survey, have given a deed to the Central Coal, Lumber and Construction company conveying land in Emmet county taking in a number of islands near there. The register of deeds was advised not to record the deed. It is the theory that these New York jollies are having these deeds recorded that they can show a claim to the land, which would enable them to dispose of it to innocent parties.

—Never put popcorn near the stove until it is in the popper. Many people in fact the majority—have the idea that corn wants to be over to popping a great mistake. That is just the so and it does not pop. When you get ready to pop corn, pour cold water on it and pour it right off again. If the corn is very dry let it stand in the water a few minutes. Put it right in to the popper while wet. In popping the corn should always be kept in motion until it has popped. Unless the corn has dried out, it has cracked there will be no trouble in having it pop if these directions are followed.

FEED AND FELLOWSHIP.

The County Officers and the Supervisors Fat Brother at the Helm.

One of the pleasantest social events in the history of the Hotel Elston occurred there last Thursday night, when the board of supervisors, and the retiring and new county officers met at the banquet table.

It all came about in this way: On Monday the closing day of the board's session, the chairman sent down for ex county treasurer Cooper and ex Register Kenyon, who were engaged in shaping things for their successors. Both gentlemen thinking time was yet something to explain pertaining to their stewardship went to plain to "the presence."

Chairman Graf discovered them to stand before the bar, and proceeded to give Mr. Cooper a solid gold Masonic ring and Mr. Kenyon a gold watch chain and charms. Both gentlemen were taken completely by surprise, but managed to express their gratitude.

But Frank and Henry did not propose to let the matter drop, and began at once to conspire. The result was the tender of a complimentary banquet to the board. The event occurred Thursday evening, as above stated. The were present the entire board except Wegner and Adams, who could not be present, the boys, Kenyon and Cooper, county clerk Weeds, sheriff Coulter, register Pearson and treasurer Payton. As guests were present, the county officers ex-probate judge Bailey, of Mancelona, E. N. Clink and Geo. E. Brown, of East Jordan and W. A. Smith, of the SENTINEL. Judge Mayne officiated as toastmaster.

When the cigars and coffee came in Judge Mayne arose and made a very felicitous speech, referring to the good fellowship that has always existed between the board of supervisors and the county officers. Then the Judge proceeded to call up prominent matters, and into one man present was excused. The time occupied from the advent of the company to the last speech was two hours and twenty minutes. The gathering complimented the banquet by a hiding vote.

For the benefit of some of the county papers the SENTINEL wishes to state that the clerk was not forgotten when the gifts were made, treasurer to pay for Cooper's and Kenyon's jewelry, and that the expense of the banquet will not come out of the public funds.

The event was a most enjoyable one, and, in point of unique, equaled any spread ever prepared in Charlevoix.

—Central Lake Torch: The jealousy exhibited by the less favored towns because the diesel party made Central Lake its headquarters while in the state is wonderful. Many papers are claiming that the bear which was shot by the Duke had been "planted." In other words that Central Lakers had put up a job on his royal highness by turning a tame bear loose in the woods to be slaughtered by the royal party. Of course its only jealousy that prompts them to make the charge for every one knows that the Fleks would not play a practical joke even on royalty. The trouble is that Central Lake is the prettiest and best little town in Michigan and that its fame has spread abroad even into England, and what more natural than that whenever a member of the royal family visits the state they should make straight for Central Lake and should stay here as long as possible. They liked Central Lake; they like it, and they meant it. They could not buy the town and take it way because they not for sale; but they can come again and they said they might do so. These sore towns that are making so much ado over the bear story may as well hush up. We got the duke and the duke got the bear.

SCHOOL NOTES.

Mr. Howe and Miss Greenaway attended the meeting of the State Teachers' Association at Lansing during the vacation.

The first semester examinations will be held during the last half of next week. The second semester begins on Jan. 23.

With more fortunate railroad connections and perhaps better planning this year all the benefits of the public schools were made ready and ready for duty on Monday morning.

Magdalen Mulder has entered the high school for literary work, and Chauncey Peterson, of Boyne, with Chas Emrey and Rollet Hess have taken up some special commercial work.

A few parents this year, as for a number of years in the past, have expressed a wish to start some young children to school after the first of January. This has always operated to the disadvantage of the children themselves, the rest of the school, and the teacher's work as a whole. Were which these children try to do three or four months behind the class is of no advantage to them. It is a decided disadvantage to everyone else. In view of the difficulty this has caused in the past the board at its last meeting decided that hereafter pupils who are already of school age when the school year begins will be entered at that time or else wait until the beginning of the next school year. This rule will be made a stand by in the beginners' class later than the first month of school. On January 23 these beginners' classes will take up their first reading book. Hollan's Primer has been selected for that purpose this year and all these children should be provided with it at that time. In this connection it may be of interest to know that the Michigan State Teachers' Association has begun a movement to have the school age raised from five to six years. The majority of children under six years are unprepared for effective school work. The child who begins at seven usually outstrips those younger and who have been kept out of school work. The child who begins at seven usually outstrips those younger, because he has more matured energy and interest. Many of the ones who enter younger drop back from lack of physical strength and because their interest is tired out before they are old enough to appreciate the meaning and value of education. It is the growing opinion of many educators that this confining of young children in the schoolroom is unnatural, inappropriate and in every way unsatisfactory. If on the other hand the work is made much like play, the play spirit often continues even through the high school and in later life. The pupil does not want to do anything except what is made and attractive, and ones of anything that requires independent effort.

PROOF OF TELEPATHY

SUBTLE CONNECTION BETWEEN MINDS OF MEN.

Experiments Made in France Give Interesting Results—Thought Waves Transmitted Over Long Distances—Water Not the Best Conductor.

In my efforts to discover the mechanism of telepathic communication I made a Robson medium, French, taking him to the house of M. de Alberthe, at Joinville, says a writer in the Paris Comoeo, translated for Public Opinion. He had read that Monsieur had at one time put a woman to sleep by placing the case in a basin of water, the woman having placed her umbrella in the same basin. I decided to see if the same effects could be produced with my medium. I went one morning with Monsieur to the border of the Marne and requested him to put his case in the water where I also placed my own stick at some paces upstream, at the same time making a muscular effort. Soon on our part produced a violent contraction of the arm of the medium, who nearly fell into the water, although I subsequently discovered that the interposition of a boat between myself and the medium succeeded in arresting the effect. We then returned to the garden of the house and proceeded to make a series of experiments.

M de Alberthe joined us in our experiments, and the medium and myself went to the border of the Marne, a river with a breadth of 180 feet, and a depth of from 15 to 20 feet, being very rapid. De Rochas was asked to place himself at the river, while Pulfil and myself took another boat and the school yard, the medium was entered at that time or else wait until the beginning of the next school year. This rule will be made a stand by in the beginners' class later than the first month of school. On January 23 these beginners' classes will take up their first reading book. Miss Have Fire Drills.

Supervising Inspector C. H. Westcott of the eighth district has returned to Detroit after a trip through his district, which includes Detroit, Port Huron, Chicago, Milwaukee, Marquette and Grand Haven. He says a more liberal interpretation of the inspection laws has been made necessary by the new duties will fall upon the shoulders of the local inspectors.

Capt. Westcott says it is the duty of the local inspectors not only to see that the proper appliances for saving life and fighting fire are aboard the boats within their district, but they will also be expected to see that the crews of these ships are properly instructed as to their use.

Many of the boats have more appliances aboard than are required by law, but in many instances the crews are not familiar with their use. Hereafter the local inspectors will be expected to demand a boat drill or fire drill at any time they deem necessary, and should the crews not be familiar with their stations drill or the operation of life boats the inspectors are to give the necessary instructions.

The real cause of the revocation of several licenses immediately after the recent visit of Rear Admiral Field is becoming known. Several masters had regularly entered upon their log books the date and time of lifeboat and fire drills, when as a matter of fact these drills had not been held.

By H. W. TAYLOR

So, for four days in succession, Billy Taylor, as usual, at a time when he was supposed to be probably asleep, sat down with the full confession of the last between dusk and midnight. Then, at a moment as the whole conduct of the man deserved, he burned it.

That he felt decidedly resentful toward Billy for his long wait was not strange, since it was that everybody had been long enough to wait certainly for their natural indolence, until the time of the year when the background assumed of Southern Illinois.

Time, too, had to that matured state, when the sun, after a long, hot, hard, exhausted in the noon of that October day, Wednesday, Wickly's guests had gone, the last to depart, to attempt from the Wickly's front porch,

FOR CHEAPER THINGS THAT IS THE CHIEF AIM OF THE TARIFF TINKERS.

Lower Duties Would Bring Lower Prices, but the Result Would Be to Lower Wages Also and Decrease the Purchasing Power of Labor.

There is a side to the tariff question that has behind the backs of the tariff reformists. The Sun is never quite sure which side it is on. Frequently it is on both sides at the same time. It was so in the recent campaign, supposing the Republican national committee and orators are supposing the Republican state ticket there is however one question that coming which the Sun's attitude is more uncertain. Its natural of organ tariff reform is a thing that can always be counted upon. Herein is possibly no friend at odds to its counsels advocate protection for an immediate reduction of the Dingley tariff schedules. Of course, the Sun's idea of revision is a downward revision. It exhibits no desire for upward revision. As to downward revision it is perfectly at home and enthusiastic as the tinkers of tariff reformers. For example:

"Dingley duties benefit the foreign producer in two directions—a reduced price in our home market and increased wages of our employes, and it is a shameless of advocacy of a tariff which does not do both."

"Mostly enough stated, to be sure. Nothing but the consumer is benefited by a tariff reform so far as the tariff is concerned

MYSTERIOUS THEFT IN SMALL SOUTH DAKOTA TOWN.

Missing Sack Held Registered Letters Containing Valuables Was Found To Be Alive at Its Usual Hour, Emptied Of Its Contents.

The United States postal service suffers an unusual loss in the form of a serious robbery of a registered mail sack from the station at Sioux Falls, a large town south of Sioux Falls. The sack was in charge of the Northwestern Route 2 Madison, and was consigned to Sioux Falls. It left Madison at 1 o'clock in the morning on the train and was in the charge of the mail messenger, the train being the Minneapolis accommodation, which stops at Madison for the purpose. The pouch in question was placed in the mail car at Madison and was in charge of the mail messenger when the train left Madison. The pouch was not opened at any time between Madison and Sioux Falls, and was in the mail car when the train left Sioux Falls. The pouch was found to be missing when it was opened at the post office in Sioux Falls. It was a pouch in which registered letters were sent, and was locked and sealed when it left Madison. It was not known how many letters were in the pouch, but it was known that it was a large one, and that it was heavily sealed. The pouch was found in the station at Sioux Falls, but was empty

SNARING BIG SHARKS

HOW HAWAIIANS CAPTURE FEROCIOUS MAN-EATERS.

Human Flesh Once Used by Chiefs as Bait—Now Specially Prepared Delicacies Are in Order—Supposed Value of the Bones and Skin.

It appears that the Hawaiian chiefs of ancient times had some more sense of it to the use of human flesh as bait for sharks. It came thereto that it was equally acceptable to the shark, and was the chief's opportunity to kill any man whom he disliked. The victim was cut up and left to decompose for two or three days in a cemetery. Remembered I was a good shark feeder, and kept those of his victims who were intended for bait in a big tomb the great temple of Moikiki.

We feeders given a particular interesting account of another method of capturing the huge beast, of a seafaring shark, followed by the natives. They first of all captured a large number of the small common sharks, cut out their livers with a portion of the flesh, scattered them in the waters and sunk them underground. From one hundred to one hundred and fifty in a hundred canoes were laid out with the baited meat and large quantities of the crushed flesh. Pieces mixed with a little water and contained in large gourds. The first would cast many miles out to sea in the direction in which the shark is known to range.

Arrived at a comparatively shallow place, the canoe containing the bait fisherman, with the gourd and lever over who was supposed to be hollow gourds, would cast out the baited hooks and lower would be thrown overboard, a few handfuls at a time. The shark thrives. After a few days the grease and smell of the crushed flesh would spread through the warm many miles in course. The gourds would be emptied and the canoes would go

LOUISE MICHEL DEAD.

FAMOUS FRENCH ANARCHIST GETS DEATH'S SUMMONS.

Passes Away in Marseilles After Stormy Life of 75 Years—Instructs Minister, Implored for Wife Murder, To Pardon Her.

Louise Michel, prominent as a socialist and anarchist, died last night in Marseilles. Premonitory symptoms of the end of the career of the famous woman were noticed yesterday afternoon, when she became delirious. Her physicians, who had been called to her bedside, ordered her family to administer the last rites of the Roman Catholic church. Her condition was reported to be critical last night, and her death was hourly expected. The news of her illness was received with great sorrow by her numerous friends in Paris, where a large number of them are now assembled. The prefect of police, in consequence, has ordered a special force to be in readiness to prevent any demonstration that may be made in honor of the dead woman.

Louise Michel's career as a socialist and anarchist dates from the time of the Paris Commune, of which she was a prominent participant. She was arrested on the fall of the Commune and was sent to the penal colony of New Caledonia, in the Pacific ocean, where she remained for many years. Her return to France was the occasion of a great demonstration by her admirers, who regarded her as a martyr to the cause of liberty. She was again arrested in 1890 and was sent to a lunatic asylum in the department of Seine-et-Marne, but she was released after a few months, and she then took up her residence in London. She returned to Paris in the spring of 1895, and she was again arrested on the charge of being the author of a seditious placard calling upon the unemployed to demand "bread or lead." She was acquitted by a jury, and she then went to London. She returned to Paris in the spring of 1897, and was again arrested on the charge of being the author of a seditious placard. WICKLY'S WOODS

Betty Rose looked very much relieved at announcing Dudley's arrival in spite of trouble. Or perhaps the story was an infinite charge that none of Sophie Wickly's group had ever been the author. At the same time Betty Rose was saying:

"I don't mind a bribe. And you needn't Wicky-dooks it any better by warning me of it. I'm as fat as the land is overdone! But also could not go without a sign of assent of the Great Bear worshiped for the occasion." Yet, I don't know, I may take an off day. Yes, time I'll say, to quarter seventy-five. Dudley is a sound practitioner. Can't be a sound practitioner, can he?"

Mr. Wickly looked a no sign. Pro bonus knows he was. Dudley was known that fact good to the best of his knowledge and belief. Dudley was the young man that had made a fine impression on the Wickly group. Dudley was the young man that had made a fine impression on the Wickly group. NO LONGER HER DOG.

Blonde Woman Had Forever Lost Claim on "Golda."

A big blonde woman demanded tearfully upon a late pretentious but decorated woman she was walking in Park avenue, leading a handsome setter dog by a leather leash.

"What are you doing with my dog?" she shouted. "Come here rightaway."

Golda establishment resembling an appearing overjoyed at the meeting.

"We were lucky, indeed," the woman retorted the little woman, "that I have been mine for four weeks."

Then a gentleman who took a more man signed by the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals acknowledging the receipt of $5 and giving her ownership of the dog. There were exchanged and the case was subsequently investigated by an attorney representing the blonde woman. But she had to give up her dog.

It appeared the woman who was leading the dog found him wandering on the street. He was not recently licensed and had no collar. She allowed him once to jump into her carriage and take the dog to the Animal Shelter. She was sure that all her dogs were killed there if she confined within five-eight hours. She refused to be satisfied by somebody else. The dog escaped selling that time. If she had she would not have allowed him to take away. No owner appeared and she got the dog. Claim was made by the blonde woman forever.—New York Press.

DECAY IN SKIN FRUITS.

It Is Hastened by Blocking of the Natural Covering.

Skin fruits are generally exposed. The skin is almost always of a delicate texture and nature really intended that the skin should be a protection to the fruit in some way. How can this be? What is the skin? It is a thin, tough, but very delicate covering, which nature provides for the fruit to keep it from the rain, dew, and other moisture, and from the sun. It is also a protection against the entrance of germs of putrefaction and fermentation. You see, the skin is a very delicate thing, and the fruit is very tender. Now, if you cover the skin of a tender, delicate fruit with a varnish, you block up the pores of the skin, and the fruit begins to decay and to decay very much sooner than if it had been left to itself. Now

MAY NEED DISCIPLINE

SANTO DOMINGO MAY HAVE TO BE CHASTISED.

Publication of Instructions Notifies Its Citizens Of Consequences That May Follow Disturbances in Their Country—Dominican Minister Talks.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 7.—The publication of the instructions given to the American minister at Santo Domingo by the Hague tribunal, which have been published in the United States for the information of the government and other interested persons, has been followed by a statement from the Dominican minister, Henriquez y Carvajal, which is regarded as a very frank and plain statement of the situation. The minister says that the Dominican government is not in a position to meet its obligations, and that it may be necessary for the United States government to take some steps to compel the Dominican government to do what it should do in the premises. The minister says:

"The Dominican government is not in a position to meet its obligations. It is not a question of money, but of organization. The Dominican government has been in existence for 100 years, and it has never been able to establish a government that will last for more than a few years. Nobody is to blame for this. It is the fault of the country. The people are good, but they are ignorant. They are brave, but they are quarrelsome. They are patriotic, but they are selfish. They are willing to fight, but they are not willing to work. They are willing to die for their country, but they are not willing to live for their country. They have not the education, they have not the training, they have not the experience, they have not the patriotism, they have not the unselfishness, they have not the self-control, they have not the self-sacrifice, they have not the self-denial that are necessary for the maintenance of a government. Hence we have had a succession of revolutions. Hence we have had a succession of dictators. He returned from exile, he returned from exile, he returned from exile, he returned from exile. He put a stop to all this. He established a government that promised to last for years. He died. Within two years after his death his government was overthrown. Since then we have had a succession of governments, each one more unsuccessful than the preceding one. Hence we have had a succession of revolutions. Hence we have had a succession of dictators. He

Conducted by
J. W. BARROW, Chatham, N. Y.
(Near Copenhagen) New York State Grange.

MAINE STATE GRANGE.

There is $72,300 Invested in Grange Halls in the Pine Tree State.

The annual session of the Maine State Grange was the largest in numbers ever held. Hon. Stephen Coffin is master. His annual address was a valuable contribution to the work of the order in the time during the past year. He's congratulated of the same lines that meet approval. Another point he laid emphasis on is that no state master should ever accept political office of any sort while holding office in the grange. He said that sentiment here prevails but some complained during the year and entered complaints, a gain in membership of 5,000. Eleven new grange halls have been dedicated during the past year, making 671 in the state in grange halls in Maine. Section 10 is the only question in mind. The grain has stood on our page in the annual for conditions of the contents relic to the Subject we have to pay? Its subsequent questionable, and on road building and the bringing to bear the attention of the grange upon congress. It had as lessons would for the establishment of a parcels post. The percentage report showed the total condition of the Maine to be 102.8 in 1902 as 100. Professional school has thirty-five students and a fund amounting to $1,000 on hand. The Maine State College is now in a good condition and the trustees have taken steps to secure a large attendance of students. The Maine State Grange has 2,000 members, and five orders have over 400.

New Hampshire State Grange.

At a recent session of the New Hampshire state grange the condition of the order in that state was reported to be very gratifying. The total membership at the close of the third year, Sept. 1, was 27,844, and in view of the fact that the population of New Hampshire is only 500,000 and that 27,000 are members of the order the Granite State can justifiably claim to be the leader in grange membership, per capita population, being taken as a basis of comparison. The net gain during the year was 952. The total membership of the Pomona grangers is 8,236, a gain of 156. The grange has to its credit in cash $234,000.75. The sixth degree was conferred on 318 candidates. The fifteen counties of the state furnished points for the next year.

Pomona Grange in Ben Davis Fair.

Rockingham County Pomona Grange has purchased the grounds of the Agricultural society of Rockingham and will transfer to control the county fairs in succession. The will be recently that will be closely watched by the Patrons all over the state. The account includes the indebtedness of the agricultural society, which is $1,100. The agricultural further operation of the fair at the end of twenty years the Pomona does not wish to relieve the grange from any knowledge in Patrons' pick to a figure to the taken or city of Stoneham for a public park.

Salaries at National Officers.

The national grange committee on finance recommended the following salaries: Five hundred dollars per year and $5 per day and actual traveling expenses for the national master, $400 and $5 per diem for the weekly treasurer, $1,000 and traveling expenses for the secretary secretary, $400 and traveling expenses for the weekly treasurer and $3 per day and expenses for the members of the executive committee. It was also recommended that $1,000 be set aside as a lecture and extension fund.

The Subordinate Grange.

The subordinate grange is the basis of our order, and without it we could not succeed, says State Master Gleaf of New Jersey. It is the strong link in the chain that binds the great farmers' organization together from ocean to ocean. The subordinate grange is the nursery of the Pomona state and national grange capital upon good work done by the subordinate. It behooves us as Patrons to look well to the great superstructure upon which the order rests. Let each be a farm one school, where the mind and heart can be cultured, the vision be broaden and life made worth living.

Its Source of Strength.

Not in the harvest feast, not in the social hour, not in the good time, but in the service it can render humanity is the line of useful development, the grange of life fitted to be had its source of strength and its inspiration. Exchange.

Hon. E. E. Norris, master of the New York state grange, was re-elected chairman of the national grange executive committee without opposition.

The handwriting of the grange may be seen on many of the statute books of the various states.

The practice of indorsing candidates for political office in the grange is of doubtful propriety.

The Troy (Pa) Mutual Fire Insurance company carries about $2,500,000 insurance for its members.

The national grange wants Indian corn to be the national flower.

Brattleboro Stores Comet Judge Colpoe is an officer in the Evening Star grange, No. 37, of Oregon.

Governor C. J. Bell has been reelected master of the Vermont state grange.

ALL WANTED TO HELP A DOG.

City's Traffic Stopped While Busy Persons Succor Wounded Canine.

Traffic on Peachtree was blocked long during the noon rush, and shoppers, even in Atlanta, Ga., spoke to the New York Herald from a cab and a hack. Autos swerved, singers Atlanta's great Peachtree thoroughfare, with a cry of distress. Immediately the business people came to the hub. Some one was hurt. Then some one proved to be a little brown and yellow dog, which had been run over by a wagon.

The little victim was urged to drag a broken leg and badly injured head toward the sidewalk, and was having a very hard struggle, when a well dressed lumbman man darted out from the crowd and gathering it up with fairly excited it in a jiffy out of the busy street.

A crowd had thronged and the motorman halted cars, directing the road around the obstacle. Pending he was not responsible he still wanted to see if there was no connection he could do to get out of the mishap that was going on in the city, said.

Everybody wanted to do something. Physical culture director, fit of a circus magic showed as pretty a type of Miss Peachtree as ever blushed to adorn the reputation of the Atlanta girl. Eleven to chase the dog with a capped promptness and the hand of each was an expression of sympathy.

A well dressed gentleman hurried up, bending over the victim, he made an effort and gave a low exclamation as he a wonderful expression. "Get some bandages quick!" he said. A young lady ran near bandage in the drug store and returned with a dripping, carry the wounded dog. The gentleman applied the bandages the dog licked up with an expression of thanks and appreciation and in another moment the animal was gone.

JUST TURNING THE TABLES.

Captain Had Waited Long and Made Others Wait.

Col. Henry Cockerill, former commander of the Fifth Ohio battalion, Spanish Lazaro island, tells a new story on Admiral Dewey's famed "Do not fire."

Until recently admiral Dewey now promoted to be, based on royal examines in Washington, was commander at Lazaro island.

"Speaking of slow promotion in the navy" said the colonel, "reminds me of a incident the admiral made to the navy paymaster just after he had been promoted to the rear admiral well from commander to captain. He had an incident which was to take place in the ship waiting exceedingly beyond the appointed moment. Every officer knew he was the old martinet. It was his first order as admiral. Captain Sigsbee strolled now chiefly up. Paymaster Charles W. Stearns, who was in charge of the launch, surveyed the youthful commander with critical impatience.

"Suddenly, he said, turning to have just been promoted, and you—you have made a bad beginning. You have forgot the boat waiting ten minutes, sir!

Democratic Reciprocity.

The Foot Does its part toward clarifying the situation by remarking on the Canadian tariffs Republican fore:

"The Republicans want reciprocal arrangements consistent with the principles of protection. But there are some such."

This sets the Post to full sound with Prof. Isaac Lemon Sutton, who said to the Herald the other day:

to us is to be used with profusion. We are to continue to allow to and upon the great policies which have so well served us in the past. They are not to be abandoned or relieved of; they are to be subject and maintained with unusual care continuous.

THE TRUTH ADMITTED.

That the Advance in Wages Exceeds the Increased Cost of Living.

One of the main contentions of the standard party in the presidential campaign just closed was that as a direct consequence of protection robbery the cost of living had been enormously increased in the past few years and that the wage earner was in a positive sense the victim of this outrage and extra of things. Since proof of the assertion that a protective tariff enriches the few at the expense of the many could not be asked, provided it were true that the increase of the cost of living had far outstripped the increase of wages paid. But the war cry fell flat. The people did not believe it. They knew better. They gave it from the added luxuries and comforts they were able to indulge in. They knew it from their savings banks. They know it from their own profits of losses to an extent never before known. they know it from their increased holdings in building and loan associations. they know it from the increased volume of insurance carried in companies which make a specialty of insuring the lives of wage earners. Knowing these things, they could clear eyes to the false teachings of men who sought to unsettle the existing conditions of prosperity and to their vision on the 4th of November elected the Republican authorities to a plurality of more than 2,000,000, and a majority of more than 1,000,000 over all other tickets.

Having spoke the question of the cost of living and related to the tariff in response to the misuse of putting a price on increasing capital is made to the local bulletin of the Dispatch of those conscientious ladies and business showing the fluctuation in wholesale and retail prices through a series of years. The average cost of food purchased per family compiled from the reports of Bradstreet's bulletin shows as follows for each of the past fourteen years:

1891	[illegible]
1892	[illegible]
1893	[illegible]
1895	[illegible]
1896	[illegible]
1897	[illegible]
1898	[illegible]
1900	[illegible]
1901	[illegible]
1902	[illegible]	Average, $[illegible]
1903	[illegible]
1904	[illegible]	Average, $[illegible]

Considering from this statement of the relatively small increase in the cost of food products the New York Times says:

Patrons of this kind are necessarily homeopathic and to a great extent satisfactory. Howsoever, they are as rare as are available, and neither is shown by them more clearly than that the cost of living measured by the prevailing food standard, has not increased during the past fourteen years in anything like the ratio in which wages have advanced.

The only standard attainable, even with its qualifications adhering to the time as "Bradstreet's and its great system dissatisfactory," is a great deal for the free trade Times to make. The plain fact which the Times concedes however, is, that "the cost of living has not increased during the past fourteen years in anything like the ratio in which wages have advanced."

The plain fact which the Times concedes however, is, that "the cost of living has not increased during the past fourteen years in anything like the ratio in which wages have advanced." The Democratic campaign contention was false. Then it is no true that the protective tariff has plundered and robbed the wage earner by augmenting the cost of living without increasing his wages in equal proportion. Of course it is not true and the New York Times knows as well unless as it knows after the election that it was and true. The simple fact is that in increased wages and in increased employment the protective tariff has made more it so made good to the wage earners the increase from $1073 to $1273 of the yearly average net per family of four persons. The truth is that under protection the American wage earner is better off than he ever was indeed infinitely better off than the wage earners of any other country on the face of the globe.

TO CHEAPEN THINGS.

The Principal Reason for Advocating Tariff Revision.

The Chicago Tribune and some other conservative newspapers are whether and either that continue shall immediately take up the tariff for readjustment. Of course suggestions of tariff changes will come from a Democrat destroy these prices. If lower prices are not the object, now why should there be changes in the tariff? When tariff changes are proposed the subject comes up for discussion on its merits. Many protectionists believe that a tariff tax is low enough to replace every American industry in competition with foreign industries, even for a set of the American trade, is too low. Some people have the idea that the protection of the country is for just high enough to insure any foreign competition from the outside world without the outside world being able to enter our trade. They think if the tariff were made just low enough to afford the domestic manufacturer to compete in the home market, and not to get in it, it would stimulate all at home and at the same time insure the American the privilege of buying cheaper than it would if the tariff were high enough to exclude the American market for the American manufacturer—making the people in general upon American competition in the business of the prices. It is evident that there are a considerable number of people who regard the Republican system as being so tender that it would be ruined by Democratic tariffs, believe that if there had made a bad beginning. You have forgot the boat waiting ten minutes, sir!

"The Captain, Mr. Stearns," said the new admiral, with a humiliating glance and a look directed at no one in particular, "I've been waiting years for the privilege."—New York Times.

Not good Than.

The New York Journal of Commerce asks a question which it would be glad to answer in the affirmative. Why the Republicans divide on the tariff? A tariff is the choice of the Republican party is the only hope of temporarily free traders. So long as that party stands united on the tariff it sweeps the country. When it divides on the tariff the other fellows will have a chance, and not until then.

WILLARD A. SMITH, EDITOR.

Legislative Correspondence.

Lansing, Jan. 21, 1905.

To THE SENTINEL:

The Forty-second Michigan Legislature has passed its third week, and is now ready for business. These three weeks have been devoted to organization and preparation, the selection of the necessary officers in the two houses, the naming of the committees, the acquainting of the members with each other and with their duties and lines of work, and the setting of themselves into such living arrangements as they find necessary or desirable. There is a large proportion of new members, and these preliminaries have required considerable time. The actual sessions have been few and brief; but it is not necessary to suppose that the time outside of these have been wasted.

The distribution of the one hundred and forty members as appears at adjournment upon the more than one hundred committees of the two houses, was the small undertaking, and the general feeling is that it has been admirably and well done. In several particulars there has been evidence of a disposition to carry the suggestions of Governor Warner's inaugural message, and in line with his urgent suggestions and careful examples in his appearances in Speaker Moore's adherence to this proposition, not to place upon a committee any of the state institutions a member from the county where the institution is located. This is quite a departure from the old, and I think wise, well, and it should not be thought an expression of any reflections in all honesty provisional for those institutions that hold so large a part in the welfare and the renown of the state. The governor took pains to urge not only adequate support of our educational institutions at the hands of the legislature, but also such personal interest in the details of their management as should promote their best efficiency.

In many ways it is happily apparent that the state government starts off under hopeful conditions of harmony between the executive and the legislature, between the two branches of the legislature, between the departments of the government, and between the people and their government. This last condition is one of peculiar sensitiveness, and may be easily disturbed or alienated. Conversation with officers and legislators cannot fail to reveal a sincere desire to commend it, by deserving it. If there is anywhere a lurking purpose to cheat the popular expectation for something more than legislation along the line of primary reform, as some predicters seemed certain would appear before long, it is not apparent, and it would surely be too weak to be at all effective.

Primary reform has a wide diversity of meaning, as the term has been used in the last two or three years, in which it has also been used by no few parties of various stripes. But, in one phase or another, it has made more prominently into view, and becomes the subject of wider discussion, than perhaps any other question in our politics has ever done in the same time. Nearly every state has legislated or is in process of legislating upon it; and we may safely assert that not one, state or nation, has yet found the end, or advance in that direction that gives safe promise of bettering conditions in Illinois is unsafe to agitate upon that will unfoundedly pass, for complicatory primary elections throughout the state, but it only provides for election of delegates to nominating conventions, and not for nomination of any officers, quite short of what popularism politics in Michigan have promised.

The more important appointments that Gov. Warner has thus far announced have been made, as the governor has specifically stated, in recognition of past services well performed in the case of responsibilities, and in the case of new appointments, through expectation that the men selected are especially capable of giving excellent service to the state in the line of official duty for which they have been named. Mr. Barry for lieutenant-governor, Mr. Atwood for railroad commissioner and Gen. Kidd for quartermaster general, are appointments made by reason of their outstanding reputations as capable and strong representatives when official duties throughout the first term have been well rendered. The appointment of Dr. McCloud as labor commissioner, of Mr. Wildey as salt inspector, of Mr. Bird as dairy and food commissioner, as well as Gov. Warner's military and various state board appointments, have met with approving comments from all who personally know the men selected and have information touching the duties they are to perform.

It is a fair and candid judgment that Gov. Warner asked for his appointees and his administration, that his work as chief executive and the work of those for whom he is responsible shall be judged by results obtained and by whatever evidence shall appear of sincere effort on their part to meet the wishes and expectations of all the people of Michigan. It is a very reasonable request from Michigan's new executive, and Gov. Warner can be assured that at least those who make up the more than sixty thousand majority he received at last fall's election will be quite willing to extend to his administration a fair and generous judgment.

Representative Waters of Washtenaw introduced a bill to deduct from assessed valuations the amount of mortgage indebtedness upon the property. The subject of mortgage taxation has seemed to be a difficult one for Michigan to deal with, for the state of Illinois has had its successful and unquestioned operation for ninety years, but under which time upon mortgage values are reported, and assessed but once.

A bill by Representative Towsley of Kent would abolish the state tax, as an unnecessary expense, covering only four years after the national census. It takes a census at the middle of the decade would be worth the cost. Iowa does it a deep year to go, on the odd figures. But once is not at the middle, as that of New York and some other states is, and would better match its cost if it were at the middle.

Gov. Warner has appointed W. W. Mitchell of Cadillac, and Marion F. Gardner of Delaware, from the board of managers for the Eastern asylum.

The Smith scandal developed a number of bills of interest. Wednesday, Chatfrandt of Houghton had a bill to allow the Masonic grand lodge of the state to act as trustee of certain funds. He said that a veteran past grand master, who now is very old, wishes to give the Masonic home at Grand Rapids $100,000 endowment, but that there is no legal provision by which it can be accepted. He did not give the man's name, but it is believed to be Hugh McCurdy of Coldwater. The bill was passed under a suspension of the rules.

The repeal of the fifty day limit for introduction of bills, by joint rule on November, will operate to lessen the flood of little "carbons," and if it does prove a salutary change, Horton.

ANDREW JACKSON'S BIG ESTATE

How He Gained 50,000 Acres as Fees In Law Cases He Tried.

There are two ways of considering the Hermitage from Nashville—either by carriage the entire distance or by train to the little station called Hermitage, thanks by courtesy alone of that the remaining three miles to Hermitage, says a writer in Sunday News. The way leads among the rich and hills of "sunny Tennessee," through native forests which we may easily imagine look just as they did in the latter part of the eighteenth century, when Andrew Jackson, a young man who had just completed a hard and very unremunerative course of reading law, chased all his worldly goods and himself on the back of his one horse and turned his face from the Carolinas to the then government of eastern Tennessee, to make his fortune.

The land records of Davidson show that it was twenty-three years that Jackson laid the foundation for the large estate he afterward owned. He was the only lawyer in that region in the early nineteenth century who became scarce and fees were cheap and a lawyer's fee for conducting a case of no very great importance would usually be a "coon" a square piece of land, in a few years he was the owner of over twenty acres, which he acquired while cheap and kept till it advanced in value, when he sold part of it to enable him to cultivate and improve the remainder.

Indian Laved Holy Book.

North and south, east and west the Bible society goes, and that no ground is too barren for its seed sowing is the following from missionary news, and a wrinkle in theirsingly. A Christian and his son, fishing in the northwest some years ago, during the whitefish season, ventured on an island across the pickerel, thinking they could find what he called "the Book of Heaven" in their pack. When they reached a burning ground, however, two miles distant from the fishery they found the book had been left behind. It is a fact that one of them went back on his tracks, walking a four days and again through the solitary, heavily-forested forests to regain that Bible.

Children's Working Hours.

Improved thoughtfulness in equipment have been made in Russia to lessen the sufferings of children. The results prove that in the lower four classes study may be continued for a period not exceeding twenty-two or twenty-seven hours per week, that examination failures result from sleepless exhaustion of brain and nerves. This time for working hours seems has been fixed by the latest order of the ministry of public instruction. It is urged, however, that this should be the outside limit, and that no honest effort be omitted at home.

How Millionaires Enjoy Themselves.

Twenty millionaires representing fortunes of $1 to build a curious house in Philadelphia. A visitor recently said that these millionaires discussed high and vulgar and wicked in the dining hall and vulgar and wicked in the bars. The guests were by pickpockets, sinners, and bona fide thieves and crooks. A stolen gas stood behind a rail house, and two live plan footed in a spy. Fortune tellers told on the walls, and the pictures hights were in pumpkins and potatoes. When the company left liberty they went to a cider press, and farmer's engines took them home.

Farmer's Ingenious Device.

There was a man recently who did a tremendous business at French Lick selling a potion that was terrible to men but quick to mice. He would spread some on the powder on a slice of bread and eat it, then put a portion under a glass case in which was a rat that does as soon as it sees the bread. Here is the explanation of the trick. The powder was strychnine. But the glass case was connected with an electric battery, and as soon as the rat touched the bread the current was turned on, and it was electrocuted.

Not Equal to His Task.

Capt. Stevens, an Irish gentleman, was wont to reward his car driver with a glass of whisky and gave it to him in an extra glass which did not contain as much as fancy wished for. "That's a very quare glass, corporal," said he, "but I've paid Capt. Stevens. What's bound in it?" "Why, corporal," was the reply, "the man must have been born in the breech that blew that."

Sooty Cause a Gold Mine.

An enterprise that pays 200 per cent on its money is conducted in Egypt, according to Consul Gen. Lee, at Manchester's "Egypt," the chimneys of the Suez canal must from the chimneys every year as much soot as is ordinarily sold to fill the bins. The expense for maintenance small, the soot a score of years, during the twenty years of disuse, it says pumping water dried with sand. The bottom of the canal and repairing it far upon the banks, substitute the chief expenditure.

If the kindly comments and generous expression of favor which followed the publication of Gov. Warner's first message to the legislature, from those who opposed his election, from those who favored his election, could be gauged for his further public service, he will official design the governor and his friends need have no fear as to his favorable standing before the whole people of Michigan.

If it would give good results to allege in preventing the historical habit in which some of the Detroit newspapers seem addicted whenever they refer to the governor republican, in other sections, they might assume relief by reminding themselves from time to time that they are just as much responsible for that administration's existence, between Warner and the legislature there is reason to believe, that it should be judged by their performance, by such fidelity to pledges made as they shall exhibit and by the results accomplished in all the lines of public affairs with which they shall have to do. And the republicans of Michigan and all who are fair minded regardless of party will much prefer to judge their official representatives by what they shall accomplish than by the distorted comments of those who did their best and their worst to prevent the election of Governor Warner and the republican legislature.

The unworthy campaign trick of indulging in comments and speculations in the news columns of their publications relating to the prominent place of mention of more or less prominent republicans, and thus to raise a series of alleged differences into against the scheme or movement which had never existed nor even been suggested outside of their own sheets, is being returned to by the Detroit papers which made most use of that disreputable form of opposition during the last state campaign. The results of the last campaign, however, showed that such tactics are not the least likely to produce the effect they had in mind. But it may be well for the people of Michigan to keep this precedent method in mind in connection with the sensational statements made from time to time through the papers referred to.

FOR HARBORS.

Charlevoix is Included in the Bill for $25,000.

The river and harbor bill, which has been under consideration in executive session several weeks, is completed. Here are items in it for Michigan waters: Ontonagon, $5,000; Marquette, $5,000; Marquette bay harbor of refuge, $1,000; Grand Marian harbor of refuge, $50,000; Menominee river and harbor, present project to be modified, balance on hand $12,000 to be used in dredging lower part of harbor; Gladstone, $14,000; Manistique, $15,000; St. Joseph, $15,000; South Haven, $30,000; harbor at Saugatuck and Kalamazoo river; $75,000; Holland, $60,000 and $110,000 authorization; Grand Haven, $30,000; Muskegon, $100,000; Pentwater and White Lake harbors, $15,000; Ludington, $10,000; Manistee, $10,000; Frankfort $20,000; Charlevoix $25,000; Petoskey, $20,000; Arcadia, $6,000; Ontonagon, $5,000; Sand Beach harbor of refuge, $200,000.

The Bellaire-Charlevoix Electric Project.

Mr. Richards's project to build a water power electric generating plant at Bellaire and the transmission of power and light to Charlevoix, seems to be hanging fire through difficulty in financing it.

A contract was executed last fall whereby Mr. Richards was to give Charlevoix service by July 1st next, but extensions have been asked and granted that seems likely to delay it until another year.

Meanwhile, Charlevoix being up against a shortage of steam capacity has been compelled to provide the needed power. Last week the village closed a contract for a 200 horse power Stirling water tube boiler—a duplicate of that now in use in the west end of the boiler room. The boiler is to be shipped within sixty days, and will be installed by May 1st.

The Richards project still holds and will, in all probability, be carried out. It is agreed that Mr. Richards will take the new boiler off our hands when the new system is installed. As heretofore stated in these columns, the Bellaire plan offers many advantages over the present one, and will, after the first year, be a financial gain to the village, besides supplying day service for motors. From an engineering point of view the enterprise is pronounced entirely feasible, and one that cannot fail to bring good return, with a reserve power that will afford large margin for future increased demands.

LATER—As we go to press we learn that Mr. Richards has the enterprise successfully capitalized, and has an electrical engineer on the ground making estimates for machinery and material.

Local Inspectors Appointed.

Capt. George W. Pardee, of Holland, one of the best known shipmasters on Lake Michigan, received word from Washington Monday that he had been chosen as inspector of hulls for the eight district to succeed Capt. Thomas Hunter, who retired from the office several months ago. There has been an active campaign for the place, at least eight candidates having made application. Captain Pardee will qualify and assume the duties of his office within two or three days.

Captain Pardee for many years sailed out of Holland on the Holland-Chicago line, but for the past year he has been with the Goodrich line, sailing from Grand Haven to Chicago. His qualifications for the place are unquestioned and his selection will give general satisfaction.

Charles Hoover, of Detroit, recently appointed inspector of boilers for the eighth district to succeed Henry Hoecker, has taken charge of his office.

A Few Words About Prescriptions.

YOUR doctor fights disease with medicine. If the medicine is not right, he cannot conquer disease. If the druggist does his duty the medicine will be right; and your doctor will stand a fair chance of winning the victory. In no other branch of the drug business should the details receive more care and attention than in the prescription department. Every detail there is important. Realizing this fact, thoroughness is a feature of the prescription care and every prescription dispensed at this store has the personal attention of the proprietor and a careful checking system makes mistakes impossible. Nothing but the purest drugs and best pharmaceuticals are used, namely those manufactured by the well known chemical house of Park Davis & Co. Bring your prescriptions here and obtain full satisfaction.

Iowa Where They Have Severe Winters.

A Benton Harbor special of the 25th says:

A passenger train on the Buchanan division of the Pere Marquette has been entombed in the snow at Moscow village, fifteen miles south of this city, for sixteen hours seven commercial men were this morning rescued from their prison by farmers after a night of suffering from the cold. This morning a relief train was sent out from Benton Harbor, but it will be several hours before the beleaguered train can be reached.

Benton Harbor is in the "peach belt" of Michigan, close to Chicago and more than 250 miles south of Charlevoix.

In this section of Michigan there have been no snow blockades, every train has made its run, and the temperature has not been below zero yet.

Come up north and escape the severe winter.

Law Should be Amended.

That the commercial fishing laws should always have defects is inevitable, regulations governing this industry having to run the gauntlet of three classes of "knockers"—the commercial fishermen, the fish trust and the city sportsmen.

One defect, in our opinion, is that feature of the law which reads Pine Lake as an inland lake. It is a well known fact that Pine Lake is full of the finest whitefish to be found anywhere in fresh water. Yet they cannot be caught.

Lake trout with which Pine Lake is also abundantly stocked, may be caught with hooks or spears, though the one, but a whitefish is proof against capture by these methods. He doesn't float around in shallow waters where the fishing shanties do business and he will not take a hook.

There is no good reason why these fish should not be caught by gill nets, with proper restrictions. Fishing with nets should be confined to residents of Charlevoix county, the length and number of nets used by any one person should be restricted, and a large mesh used.

These excellent fish go on multiplying, and they should be made to contribute to the general good. We would like to see a bill passed opening Pine Lake to commercial fishing within the limits above suggested.

JAP VICTORY!

The Little Brown Men Chasing the Russians Again.

As we go to press our telegraphic advices state that a big battle was fought the 25th, and 26th, on the Hun River.

The Russian losses were from 30,000 to 42,000. Japanese losses 7,000 to 10,000. Russians retired toward Mukden and are said to contemplate retreat to Harbor.

WRONG MEDICINES CURE.

Little Girl Thinks Dinner Mixed with Food Poisons.

I received a letter about the value of uncooked food early in my career, with a woman doctor who has been ten years establishing a paying practice in New York. "After taking my degree I never had a position as resident in a large city school or the Hudson Sanitarium, in addition to my own practice, and so the only time I ever had to cook was on the sick floor. Two years ago I was called on the second time to care for a little girl, aged 12, who was suffering from a severe attack of cholera infantum, and I was astonished to find that her mother was doing the cooking for her. I ordered the mother to stop at once, and I ordered the cook to prepare a special diet for the child, consisting of a little rice and some broth, and I ordered the mother to take the child to the seashore. The child was very ill, and I was very much surprised when I received a letter from the mother a few days later, saying that the child was better, but that she had thrown the cook out of the house, because she had poisoned the child with her cooking. I was astonished to learn that the child had been given a large dinner of roast pork, fried potatoes, and pie

BANK WATCHMAN'S SCHEME OF ROBBERY REALLY CLEVER.

Mysterious Disappearance of $100 Bills Occasioned Unadvised Until Death of Nightly Executioner Employing—Was Never in Life Caught Napping.

The cashier of a bank in a western town discovered one day on balancing that his cash was always short. He went over his notes of that composition, after trying to account for the various ways without success, and found one of them was missing.

A search was made behind the safe and the loss had to be charged up to the war and such things now.

Some weeks later the same amount was missing again in the same way various ways.

When it happened a third time the cashier called in a detective—the cashier was nothing by nothing mean, and that the offender, discharmed him, and that would be one if the principles of the new cashier would make a difference.

It didn't. The time bills disappeared one at a time in regular intervals, and as the cash was now another he could have a day off.

After this had been going on for a month of more of the cashier's acquaintance who was also the janitor of the bank, he saw over everything in the place, also long with the disappearance of the notes, and the day after they disappeared he was found in the vault shot through the heart, and the cashier was found in the office, with a bullet in his head, and the safe was found to be empty in the office.

Cashier's remedy, which was found after a week of the strange disappearance and then blowing out his brains, however, unknown the two things.

Several months after the janitor's death the bank was moved into with new office furniture, and when the workmen tipped over that wooden chair of the cashier's desk the reason for the disappearance of the money was explained.

Under the wooden leg of the desk was a brass plate concealed from the cashier by a piece of thin brass that was riveted to a trap door in the floor between the floorboards of the vault, and underneath it was a safe of another type concealed in a nail in the floor.

A few moments of experimenting showed how the janitor had worked his nightly robbery quite. When he opened drawer of a safe, such the janitor was there to see, he took the plate and drew up trap door, and reaching down into the safe, he took out the bills.

The door, when the cashier was away from the safe, was a pendulum which he always put in a place that he knew the cashier would go to when in the cellar, unknown to anyone, and the cashier, in the supposition, invariably gave the compartment complained that time was deep down on the cellar of the safe. The bank would seem to indicate that the janitor knew he would meet in the cellar the deep trap. As such he could remain in the safe for a long time.

Of course, he ran the risk of being the employee of the bank, but he was working for himself, and the janitor had studied the office's habits so well that he was never caught redhanded.—New York Press.

PICTURES ON FRUIT

ONE OF THE WONDERS OF MODERN PHOTOGRAPHY.

There Seems No Limit to the Marvelous Work of the Camera—Process is Simple But Excessively Costly, Even for Novelties.

There appears to be no end to the unique uses to which photography may be applied, save the Chicago Journal. The very latest thing in the photographic novelty line is the finishing of portraits and other subjects on the actual surface of apples, pears, etc., but though the latest, it is merely one of a group of distinct novelties that have recently been evolved and which bring much joy to the lover of the unusual.

A few years ago, when photographs on buttons were announced as entertaining photographers, the announcement carried with it no small amount of interest to the general public and much a new wrinkle for those who would wear their heart or their baby on their outer clothing to revel in, but can the girl who delights to carry a photograph single of her beloved about with her need not content herself with such comparatively clumsy devices as buttons or brooches as frames for them.

If she desires she may actually have the photograph made on her own delicate skin, and there where there is no danger of losing it she may revel in it as long as she wishes.

Still another device that might perchance catch her wayward fancy is having the photographer print upon her finger nail. But if these novelties do not satisfy entirely her whims she can extend the top to almost an triangle of her.

The photographer of the present is so obliging as to be susceptible to all orders he receives, provided it be with in no way interfered with the work of manufacturing that it may be made to serve the purpose of her whims, and some out of the photographer's family adorned with the pictures she has desired to procure.

Photographic printing on fruit however is amusing in a class of itself, though it is of the same line from which all the other novelties have sprung, and is innovertible of being not to many mind amusing.

Already it has become quite a feature of the business houses in London, and at a recent reception honor affair the souvenir was a large red apple of much plate adorned with a photograph of Miss Edward.

As a tariff reform dinner in Manchester it was the mission of Joseph Chamberlain which was adamant in the matter and the companions of the evening so informed. The guests had it was proposed to flood England with British souvenirs, but when the committee in charge of the financial end of the affair allowed it to become known that the cost of each apple was exactly $2.50 when purchased by the dozen even the most enthusiastic believer in protection that mirror was growing cool the materialists had already made many inquiries about the "unknown" and the cost supply.

The process by which photographic pictures are made on fruit is simple and the surprise about it is that it was not thought of before. It involves the use of no new principles, and is merely the adaptation of photography to new materials. It is simply a matter of moistening the surface of the object on which is desired to print.

All of these novelties in photography had their origin in Paris and are of such recent date that they have only recently been in vogue there, their appearance in this country. Singular. It enough only the finger nail photograph has been taken in NY New York photographers.

WHALE A TRAVELER

OLD SAILOR TELLS INCIDENT WHICH PROVES IT.

Twenty Miles in Some Two Minutes Certainly Seems Like Record Time for Any Living Thing to Make, But of Course, It's True.

"Can whales swim fast? Why," said 72 year old whaleman Cap Jim Jones, "I've seen them go so low that they can swim.

At the time of the war I was out in the good old bark Abbie Turner, Capt. Joshua Hamlin of New Bedford, on the Atlantic fishing grounds, after sperm whale. We met up with a school of them one day about 100 miles to the westward of the Azores.

"Capt. Josh threw his mainsheet aback, and hove the old boater to and then we put out in the boats after whales. We had a long pull to get near any of them, but finally we did come up with a 70-footer that was sort of protecting about, and the boat soon man sailed him.

"Sho! Those were days in whale fishing, the days before the introduction of the bomb lance, when you had to lay a lean right alongside a whale to get a harpoon into him at all, when harpooning called for strength and cold nerve as well as skill. Jim then used to do it, and sometimes they'd smoke another iron into a whale before the boat could back away.

"Well, our man gave the whale the harpoon and the instant he got it down go went, spouting, and when he came up away he flew, with everything set and drawing double, so to speak, and with the harpoon line singing out of the nip in the bow of the boat, snapping and dancing through the water and throwing up a great spray.

"I was jolting low out in that boat, sitting right back of the harpoon pan and the tub and chocks and line, and I flipped my hand and showed it round to Jim—the spray wouldn't fly in my eyes—and that brought my head down so that I couldn't see very well around just where we were going, and I didn't want to see any way, and so I kept my head down like that for what didn't seem to me to be more than a minute or so, but all things got settled down a little, and when I looked up—

"Then we struck that whale we were down a good ten miles to leeward of the Abbie, but when I looked up, by jings, we were ten miles to windward of her! In just that little time, this minute or so that I'd had my head down like that to keep the spray out of my eyes, that whale had snaked us a good twenty miles!

"Can a whale swim fast? Why, if it was possible to match a likely 70-foot sperm whale against a torpedo boat I'd bet on the whale every time.

"But we got the whale and Vaal Jim came on with the Abbie and we got the whale along side and three days later we had his oil from it all single shored aboard.

"Three days later we had it separated and turned by the confederate cruiser Alabama, so that oil never did us any good, but we'd have carried it home if New Bedford since. If the good old ship Abbie could only have sailed fast about equally as fast as that whale could swim.—New York Sun.

As officially declared by the state tax commission railroad taxes in Michigan for this year will be at the rate of $19.62 for $1000 of assessment or one cent higher than last year. Based upon this rate the total amount will be due to the state treasury and the primary school fund from railroad taxation will be $3,227,059 —The Sun-Democrat.

Michigan's efforts is the very large increase in the revenue of our state recently brought about through increase in railroad taxation, larger returns from corporation fees and inheritance taxes. In the matter of income from such sources Michigan is equaled by very few states in the entire union.

In matters of large importance as well as in lesser things we are apt to value at less than its deserving the blessings and favors in which we are most generous shares. In our more or less turbulent discussion of tariff matters, therefore, it should be kept in mind that the protective tariff has all the wage earners of the United States at work in the production of articles which supply the largest and richest market in the world, our own. Thereby is every community and every individual more largely benefited in the long run than it and he could be in any other way or by any change that might help this spot or that spot temporarily or that might enable this man or that man for the time being to lower this cost of production.

The fact should not be lost sight of in the midst of general discussion of this and that and the other incident and detail in the methods of primary reform legislation that what such legislation is really seeking to obliterate and to prevent are the effects and the influence of dishonest participants in political affairs. It is were not for the corrupting influence of money and for the improper use of political influence and political patronage, the present and the persistent demand for reform in connection with nominations and elections would not exist. Let us hope, and we do hope, that some of the very persons who are known to have been the most flagrant perpetrators of the evils the reform laws hope to prevent are loudest in their demands for extreme legislation. It may not be possible or best to make any explanation of this peculiar situation, but it will be well worth while to keep it in mind.

NORTHERN MICHIGAN.

Emmet county will vote on the proposition of bonding for $75,000 toward a $100,000 pen. Petoskey to put up $25,000 of the amount.

The Traverse City, Lechelum and Manistique railroad company has now been sued for damages, for payment due for the time used in its construction.

A warehouse at Hates, belonging to George Wilson of Boyne, burned to the ground Saturday morning at 3 o'clock, entailing a loss of $1,000 in potatoes which were stored in the building.

On Friday last Representative Wood of this district, introduced a bill to legalize the land value of Boyne City for $25,000 for bridge purposes. He was known as known in the R. A. & S. E. R. R. to secure the extension to Alpena.

At Bellaire latey Judge Sinclair made an order admitting Mrs. Edna Nell of Ellsworth to the Northern Michigan Asylum for the insane at Traverse City. Mrs. Nell was formerly an inmate of this asylum and her husband is now in the same institution.

Lewis Johnson, a railroad engineer residing at South Arm falling through the ice, has caught the second mask-charge from Pine Lake. The fish is a giant in size, measuring four eight inches in length and weighing thirty-five pounds. It is twenty-one inches in circumference.

A petition asking the legislature to enact a law making an open season for spearing whitefish in Torch Lake has been forwarded to Representative Gelant. Concerning it the Central Lake Torch says: "The lake is said to be alive with whitefish and as there is no way to get them except with a spear or net they are bound to die of old age unless the legislature help us out.

The Grand Rapids & Indiana Railroad company, which announced a short time ago that it would abandon its branch known as the Traverse City, Lelanau & Menominee railroad, running between Traverse City and Northport, has decided to continue its operations thereon, the winter, owing to the large traffic tributary to it needing railroad service. Temporary arrangements are being made with the owners of the road, which will probably result in its permanent possession.

Petoskey gets another big enterprise to occupy the place vacated by the board of trade and heretofore occupied by the Chicago Heat Tube company says the Michigan Investor. The Romanus Block company has increased its capital to $50,000 and will employ twenty-five men, using local plants to manufacture interiors' supplies and maple and basswood office desks. B. S. Hall, president; L. G. Grimes, vice president, and C. H. Romanus, secretary, were elected at the reorganization.

Alfalfa is to assist in the reclamation of the pine barrens in this Northern Michigan country. If experiments do not miscarry, and alfalfa seems to be the thing desired, its roots will penetrate the earth to a depth of from forty to sixty feet in a search for moisture. Experiments are being made by the Michigan Central railway, over near Grayling, that barren country where nothing has grown since the "whispering pines" fell beside the woodsman's axe and were rafted down the streams or carried on the logging roads to the sawmills for transformation into lumber.

The Pleasant View correspondent of the Petoskey Independent gives the following as one of its instances of successful farming in this part of Michigan: "The Clark brothers have a piece of 30 acres. Last season they dug 850 bushels of potatoes from three acres and cut 65 tons of hay from forty acres. They keep 200 chickens, which netted $1.50 per head. They also sold $145 worth of beef. They have six better cows which averaged $60 each. They just killed a Galloway whose hide weighed 65 pounds and netted $4.55. They have to say of spelts, 'it's the crowing crop. We sowed 1½ bushels and threshed 72 bushels. We feed it to everything on the place and find it to be the best and utmost grain we ever had on the place.'"

With the mercury several degrees below zero and a nearly northwest gale raging, a brave brigade composed of citizens of Northport extinguished a bad fire lately in time to save perhaps the dollar town from burning. There also labored for several hours in the bitter bitterness suffered intensely from the cold, but their efforts continued the blaze to one building. Seeing's new two story block, valued at $7,000, was destroyed, and the origin of the fire is unknown. The lower part of the building was occupied by a saloon and the upper portion by living rooms. The house, held goods and nearly all of the contents of the saloon were lost.

Petoskey News: For the first time in several years Little Traverse Bay has frozen over smoothly, to the delight of the small boy who loves to skate. The last two days have frozen to the ice to a depth of four inches and every after noon a multitude of skaters, old and young, can be seen enjoying this exhilarating sport. A number of speedy toy boats are already on the bay, which go to speed with the boy with the whole sail. One sail known local expert with the skate sail sailed from Harbor Springs to Petoskey Wednesday, a distance of over four miles, in the remarkable time of four minutes.

At the meeting of the stockholders of the Traverse Bays Telephone Co., held at Central Lake last week, the following board of directors were elected: Hanks, F. L. church and Cornelius Gaynes, Echo; Elias Hotton, Bellaire; A. Armstrong, Alden; George Hawkridge; Central Lake, John Gillies. At the meeting of the directors Theodore was chosen president and general manager, Elias Hotton secretary, and L. Armstrong treasurer. The form of the company now touch the townships of Banks, Central Lake, Echo, Jordan, Forest Home, Antrim, Helena, Custer, Mancelona, Elk Rapids, Milton and Torch Lake in Antrim county; Chesaw water in Kalkaska county. The necessary appropriations were made at the Central Lake meeting to build through outside service lines from Atwood to Elk Rapids, via Central Lake, Bellaire and Alden; also for the purchase of telephones to rent.

—Rev. Mr. Vickers received a letter Tuesday stating that Rev. A. F. Nagler, formerly pastor here, and now pastor of Ida Stiles Memorial church at Jackson, is very low with typhoid fever, with much doubt of recovery. The SENTINEL expresses the hope that Mr. Nagler may be fully restored to health.

Patrons boxes erected on rural routes are intended exclusively for the reception of matter regularly in the mails, for delivery or dispatch through the mails and are subject to the rules which govern the United States mail boxes.

—Does a full railroad ticket expire at the time stated on its face or is it good until traveled out? This question came before a court in a suit some time ago brought against the Erie railroad for damages. Six years ago a woman bought a round trip ticket for a station for which she paid $1. She did not use the return part of the ticket until recently. The conductor refused to take the ticket and put her off the train. She sued and recovered $10,000. The case was carried to the United States Court and the judge affirmed the decision of the lower courts, although since the time was bought the road changed hands, even its name. The court holds that the purchaser of the ticket paid full fare for a trip for the distance called for by the ticket and was entitled to ride at her own convenience.

—One of the largest potato growers in Northern Michigan advocates washing of potatoes for long keeping. He says he washes his potatoes and never lost one by rot after being put away in cellars. As soon as they are dug they are hauled to a suitable rack, where the hose is turned on them and they are washed thoroughly, a hundred bushels being washed in ten minutes. —There are two or three men in Petoskey who now they heard a robin singing in the topmost branches of the tree in the yard of C. A. Hayden, on Michigan street Tuesday. They claim to have been sober, but not one of them would give permission to use their name in connection with the item. However, if the robin is here in this winter weather he must have become badly mixed in his dates.—Petoskey News. We do not doubt the truth of the story. We know of several Charlevoix people who have, with the mercury at zero, heard robins and nightingales and mocking birds sing in Petoskey. There have been occasions when the trees around the Cushman House have been full of feathered songsters and other things. Great climate, this, for birds in the winter.

—On Thursday evening of the last week the C. O. D. Club met with Miss Rose O'Neill, Dixon Ave., the principal feature being a mock wedding executed by members of the Club, all taking a note or less important role in the ceremony. It was a very brilliant affair, the parlors and dining room being beautifully decorated for the occasion, the color scheme so green and white being carried out in smilax and cut flowers. Love and cakes were served, after which the "bride's cake", in which was contained a ring was cut, Miss Florence Hamilton being the winner of the lucky piece. Flashlights were taken of the group, and after giving blue ribbons to the hostess, the club adjourned to meet this week with Miss Ruth Smith, Main St.

A Few Words About Prescriptions.
YOUR doctor fights disease with medicine. If the medicine is not right, he cannot conquer disease. If the druggist does his duty the medicine will be right, and your doctor will stand a fair chance of winning the victory. In no other branch of the drug business should the details receive more care and attention than in the prescription department. Every detail there is important. Realizing this fact, thoroughness is a feature of the prescription case and every prescription dispensed at this store has the personal attention of the proprietor and a careful checking system makes mistakes impossible. Nothing but the purest drugs and best pharmaceuticals are used namely those manufactured by the well known chemical house of Park Davis & Co. Judge Mayne Re-Nominated.

As we go to press we learn of the unanimous re-nomination at Bellaire of Hon. Fred W. Mayne, as judge of the 15th Judicial Circuit

By faithful and diligent application to the duties of his office, as well as by the marked ability he has shown on the bench, Judge Mayne has richly earned this compliment.

Not only has Judge Mayne built up an enviable reputation in his own circuit, but his ability and probity have been recognized in other circuits by his being called to other fields between his own terms. Recently Governor Warner honored him by an appointment to fill a temporary vacancy on the bench of the Manistee circuit.

Judge Mayne will be re-elected without opposition.

SCHOOL NOTES.

The school news has been mostly suspended for two weeks on account of extra work connected with the beginning of the second semester and the absence of one of the high school teachers.

Miss Jessie Hines, who has taken Miss Millinan's place in the county normal school, is a graduate of the Illinois State Normal University and of the School of Education conducted by the University of Chicago. She has had ten years' experience in graded schools, also in the normal school of New Mexico, and as principal of a grammar school in the suburbs of Chicago, besides very successful work in county institutes. With these qualifications she comes to our work well equipped, and we may expect the next year's class to be considerably large.

The county normal school was paid a hasty visit last Tuesday by Hon. W. H. French, county superintendent of public instruction for Michigan. We may expect such visits more frequently as the State Department of Education develops its plans for the county normal school work.

Charlevoix stands at the head of the list of the twenty counties of the schools now organized in this State, and to some of the rest that employ teachers this year.

Mrs. W. A. Seegmiller, of Petoskey, who taught Latin and German in Owosso for two years, has been engaged to conduct Miss Millner's classes until her return. They were taught the first week by Mr. Howe, but a telegram from Albion stated that Miss Millner is herself ill and cannot return at once.

EMMET COUNTY LANDS.

Biddison's Claim to Lands Along Lake Shore.

From Petoskey Record.

Samuel M. Biddison, whose recent alleged of coast land along the shore of Lake Michigan was refused record by Register of deeds Ide, by advice of the state attorney general, is to be sued by the authorities of Muskegon county, who apparently regard his claim with some seriousness. Mr. Biddison had been interviewed in New York City, where he has an office, and his explanation of his claim is certainly interesting. Mr. Biddison said:

"I have papers filed in Washington and Great Britain declaring my title to all of the Lake Michigan front not owned by holders of abutting property.

"I do not care what any pettifogging lawyer or county clerk in Michigan may say about my rights to this land, I am a settler here. I have been working on this matter for 25 years, and know what I am talking about.

"Fully 100 years ago the government made a survey around Lake Michigan. The water has been gradually receding, until now there is a strip from 300 feet to a mile and a half wide from the survey line to the water's edge that is practically 'No man's land.'

"The United States government disclaims ownership, and the supreme court has handed down a number of decisions holding that the abutting property owners have no title to the land from the line of the government survey to where the water touches the land. Therefore, the intervening territory belongs to anyone who claims it.

"Inasmuch as the government disclaims ownership, and the predominant decisions of the supreme court assert that the abutting property owners have no title to this land, I decided that I had as much right to it as anyone. So I began to have surveys made of all the land around the lake.

"I have made an exhaustive study of the subject. First I traced the probable ownership of the land to the tribe known as the Pottowatamies. I discovered that there was no use, in dealing with them for the land.

"Then the idea of the revolutionary land grant occurred to me. When I went with that proposition to the United States government I discovered that the government disclaimed the ownership. Then a year ago I filed my 'settler's papers' with the federal government, and also with Great Britain.

"Why with Great Britain?" asked the correspondent.

"Why that is easy to answer. The high sea proposition accounts for that. This particular land, which has been transferred by survey and my wife to the United States Mill & Lumber Co., is in extent about 25,000 or 30,000 acres. My idea in transferring this land was to make a test case.

"I understood that there is some question about the quit claim deed being recorded in Michigan. I consider that I am the only rightful owner to all of the land I have described, and it is up to the courts to determine whether any one else has a better right.

"All of the decisions so far have been in my favor. I have no intention of robbing anyone. If there are any persons who have settled on any portion of the land which I have mentioned in my declaration, I will give them a quit claim deed as soon as I am satisfied of their right to the land."

MILLARD A. SMITH EDITOR.

Whatever is lawfully involved for Detroit in the proposed abolition of the eighth grade of the public schools within Detroit, or may not make the proposition reasonable and desirable for that city, it is certainly to be hoped that such a plan will not receive favor in any other sections of the state. Michigan's graded schools are as good as in any other state in the union, and the eighth grade is one of the most important of all. Some schools have given too much emphasis to their work of preparing students for the University. This is an important function of our high schools but it is only incidental as compared with the final preparation for their life work which our grades and high schools must give to the far larger number who can not go on to the University. There are many questions which the people of Michigan may not altogether agree upon but we are inclined to believe that outside of Detroit there would be very little variance on the question of dropping the eighth grade from our public school course.

It will evidently prove very disappointing and depressing to the editors and Washington correspondents of a number of so-called independent newspapers if President Roosevelt shall continue to show favor for republican politicians and to indicate the possession of respect for republican pledges. From three Washington correspondents have come around daily reports as to the careful break that was about to occur between the president and his party. The republican leaders are opposed to the president's plans, these correspondents tell us, and the president pertters to go it alone, they hasten further to suggest in explanation of their prophecies of party dissension. In the meantime, however, it is noted by those who are in normal health and not disturbed by bad dreams that President Roosevelt is doing his best to meet the expectations of the American people as created through republican promises and republican policies, and that the republican leaders in congress are confindly doing their part in their own legislative spheres to assist in the same desirable end.

Michigan and Wisconsin are to be pitted against each other, sometime in the near future, through an oratorical contest in which the two states will be represented by students of the University of Michigan and the University of Wisconsin. The subject for the debate will be, "Should party candidates for national, state and county elections be nominated by direct vote?" It is quite fortunate, because of the great interests that are involved in this question, that it can be discussed in a thoughtful and serious way by representatives of two of our country's greatest educational institutions. The hysterical and clamorous charges and demands in our last state campaign made by those who favored the arbitrary and abrupt adoption of an entirely new nominating system, can now be seen to have been in direct opposition to the lessons of experience and of common sense. Changes in the direction of direct nominations are coming—are have, in fact, so far as Michigan is concerned—but they have come and should continue to be introduced through growth and experience as have the other important changes affecting our state and national governments. The question to be discussed between representatives of the leading educational institutions of the great west is fully worthy of the dignity and importance which is attached to it through this interstate debate.

If it be true, as stated by a state senator in his discussions of the matter in before the body last week, that the state parties boards gives any portion of its time to reviewing circuit court decisions, and in some instances usurping the function of the supreme court, it certainly is further true that board has gone far beyond the limit of its functions. Whether or not it is the fault of the pardon board, the clamor and expectation of forgiveness and freedom seems to be largely on the increase. The announcement made from time to time as to where the board meetings will be held and as to the cases which will be given special consideration at such meetings, serves as an appeal to the prisoners and their friends to be up and doing in order that they too may share in the general opportunity for having their cases reviewed which the Hoffinstein and generosity of the pardon board seem to offer. The pardoning power placed in the hands of the governor is all right and serves a sometimes very desirable and meritorious end. But it will not be well for Michigan to have the functions of the state board of pardons so proclaimed and so exaggerated as to minimize the value of our circuit and supreme courts and our state prisons in their relation to punishment for crime and the administration of justice.

Legislative Correspondence.

To THE SENTINEL:

The legislature has passed its fourth week, and has adjourned over a ten day recess to permit the committees on the various state institutions to make their visits of examination and prepare themselves to make recommendations in behalf of the interests with which they are charged. In spite of the humanitarian and the supposed desires of a few hostile critics, these are to be simple business trips and under visits of investigation, and not spectacular social junket. So large a part of the business of the legislature has relation to the institutions of the state, penal, reformatory, benevolent, and educational, the right direction of which demands the acquaintance that these trips give, that there is an evident feeling of unparalleled zeal for much legislative business in the earlier weeks, and a disinclination to grapple with much of the serious work of the session. Especially so when, as in the case of the present legislature, a majority of the members are entirely new to their duties here. Of the one hundred present representatives, fifty-one are without previous legislative experience, as are also nineteen of the thirty two senators, or fifty five per cent of the whole. It might be well, in view of the disposition of the possible necessity for deferring so much of the business until after the recess, to devote an earlier week to it.

One thing that would undoubtedly operate to promote diligence on the part of the law makers, shorten their sessions and elevate the character of their work, and make for economy in the long run, would be annual sessions for the members instead of the present per diem. It should be a salary entitled to the dignity of the position and the grade of talent it demands, and such a measure would be approved by a majority of the thoughtful people of the state. It should not be understood from these remarks, however, that the business of the present session is at as unfavorable stage as compared with other sessions, nor that the removal of the fifty-two limit for introduction of bills has been disappointing in this respect. The speaker of the house considers its progress satisfactory, and that it does not suffer at all in comparison with previous sessions.

No "skeleton bills" have been introduced to provide titles under which bills that might be needed later could be offered, as was the case in almost every session the last previous session. No more real bills have been prepared than at this stage of the last biennium. One of those in the past was of possible consequence, especially as it is understood to have the assent of the governor, is a bill of Representative Watt, of Ionia county, to abolish the tax commission. An assessing and reviewing board, with functions more restricted than the present body, especially in overturning the work of the assessing officers in the counties is a feature of the plan not yet fully developed, but which would meet a hearty welcome in the state. It is so serious that the tax commission is not a prime favorite with the people at large. It has rendered valuable service in bringing corporate properties nearer to an equitable rating, but some acts of members of the commission have not appeared consistent with the obligations of agents of the state, and popular confidence in the usefulness of the body, and possibly of some of its functions, has been seriously disturbed.

I do not think that any of the votes cast in opposition to the bill providing for the nomination of a judge in the Michigan Cloonia circuit by direct vote of the people were an east because of opposition to the principle involved," said Senator Dalid. In response to your correspondent's question, "As you know, the republican state platform pledges just such privileges as the people of the fourteenth judicial district have been given through this bill, and I certainly am in favor of carrying out all the pledges made in our platform. But it seemed to me and to the others who voted as I did on the fourteenth district bill, that it would be much better to give this privilege to all the counties and districts of the state through one bill rather than through this primary reform in each provision. This Mistake, if it was a mistake, of course has made useless by the bill which the legislature will surely pass giving to every county and district in the state the privilege of controlling their nominating methods. But the majority of the senate and the house did not agree with me," concluded the senator from Saginaw. "and perhaps the best thing has been done. But I do so think that those who favor the position taken by the republican state platform will have reason to and fault with my voice and my work when the business of the session shall have been completed."

Proposals for the reduction and restriction of a state board or commission, and protests against increasing state control of local affairs, and individual rights do not seem quite in harmony with proposals for extending such control by the creation of additional board such as is pushed by a bill for examination and license of undertaks, introduced by Senator Hawes of Saginaw. Just why and how,then as well as barbers and hairdressers, it is that in which this fussy interference with the everyday affairs of the people, might and dare, carried, accept the limit of impertinence and absurdity, and some think that has already been reached.

The house passed on Tuesday, by a very large majority, a bill to permit the Muskegon Oceana judicial circuit to nominate candidates for the limited primary election, and gave it immediate effect, to permit its employment this spring. There were but four votes in the negative, one of which was cast by the speaker, who explained that he believed the measure unconstitutional. The bill went to the senate, where it received prompt consideration and passed with the immediate effect clause by 27 to 4.

The sportsmen are also on hand with measures relating to game, but from standpoints quite different from the farmers. The farming industry is the greatest of all our industries, and the foundation of all. We have no other material interest to be compared with it in importance, not even the Fish and Game League, which wants a five year closed season for deer in the lower peninsula, so that the sports may then have more sport killing the beautiful creatures afforded, and order which a businessinder must be fined if he thinks it necessary to kill a deer in order to save his cabbage crop, as one man up country realized last fall. The five year closure for quails which the farmer ask is because of the value of the birds to insect destroyers, rendering their preservation important to the prosperity of the state, and not to provide in their slaughter a gratification of what is called the sportsman's instinct. In effect is perhaps a good name for it. We could hardly class as one of the high attributes of enlightened humanity, that quality that finds pleasure in the infliction of suffering and death upon the innocent creatures with which the Creator has beautified the world and pleasure the keenest in proportion to the fraidity terror inspired in the dumbed victim, so that it shall struggle desperately for its life. That is called gamtness, and is said to make the sport more worthy of the term sportsman.

The farmers' organizations, the Grange, farmers' clubs, the stock growers' association, dairymen's association, state agricultural and horticultural societies, and state board of agriculture, are all represented upon a committee to promote the passage of certain laws, among which are now noted. Bill for direct nominations, for appointment of dairy inspectors, for protection from adulterated food stuffs, for regulation of automobiles, for proper gatherings of wire fencing, for five years closed season for quails and partridge, permit in reduction of highways from four rods width to three rods, including membership of tax commission, and abolishing the state census. A pure food staff bill introduced by Senator Peek, of Jackson, has passed the senate during the week.

The farmer members of the legislature met in the governor's private parlor Wednesday evening and organized the legislative farmers' club, of which Governor Warner was made an honorary member. Senator Cook, of the Ingham-Shiawassee district, is president, and Senator Seeley, is secretary. BOHTON.

A few counterfeiters have lately been making and trying to sell insurance of Dr. Kingle's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds, and other sicklinses, thereby defrauding the public. This is to warn you that the genuine lightning proprietary is now a sure thing and Leland will soon take its place in the list of people—alive and up to date villages. The electric line proposition is laying dormant at present, awaiting the selling of the M & N E. It is possible that this road will extend its line to Leland and if it does, the electric line will not be necessary. The boat factory will be in operation by April 1 Work will be begun as soon as pos sible. One order has already been secured. This is from Chicago and is for a large fast boat to ply between Leland and the Manitous.

Rh Hapsh Progress. The cement mill of the Elk Portland Cement & Lime Co. located in this village is once more beginning to assume its former appearance of business activity. Since last week Tuesday a crew of twenty men have been busily at work tearing out and taking down tube mills, shafting, tanks etc. preparatory to securing the additional room necessary to accommodate the new machinery. The work of installation will be in charge of F. L. Smith & co of New York city, a firm who are thoroughly familiar with cement mills and the cement industry and who are an engineering firm as well as manufacturers. They also if not have few equals and no superiors. It is expected that it will take until sometime in May to complete the changes outlined, but when finished Elk Rapids will have within her corporate limits one of the most complete and up to date mills in the country.

Central Lake Torch: The Brown Cooperage Company and the Central Lake Lumber Company, have been consolidated and will both be operated hereafter under the latter name. Both concerns were practically owned by the same persons and were both under the personal management of Guy S Brown. The consolidation is for the purpose of simplifying the work and also lessening the stave mill so as to be started up in the seven months. This will only made heading and staves. The cooperage company's plant has been developing very fast and is now in a fair way to do as large a business as was done in former years when the firm was Liberty, Brown & Co. There is a large stock of logs being accumulated which insures a good long run this year. Mr. Brown has spent his whole business life in the work and is fully competent to carry the large business on to success. When the Liberty, Brown & Co. ceased operating here it was generally supposed that the career of our stave factory was ended, but through G. S. Brown's efforts the plant is once more in operation and bids fair to equal or exceed all previous records for business done.

It was a close call for both.

He was assigned to the Northport charge in 1859.

A Leland special says. The breakwater in the local harbor will be improved this spring to some an extent by boats drawing four or five feet of water ten hours a day. Between $500 and $600 will be spent on this. This is just the beginning so, when the matter becomes possible, the harbor will be improved to such an extent that the larger boats can land there. The election lightning proper is now a sure thing and Leland will soon take its place in the list of people—alive and up to date villages. The electric line proposition is laying dormant at present, awaiting the selling of the M & N E. It is possible that this road will extend its line to Leland and if it does, the electric line will not be necessary. Rh Hapsh Progress. The cement mill of the Elk Portland Cement & Lime Co. located in this village is once more beginning to assume its former appearance of business activity. Since last week Tuesday a crew of twenty men have been busily at work tearing out and taking down tube mills, shafting, tanks etc. preparatory to securing the additional room necessary to accommodate the new machinery. The work of installation will be in charge of F. L. Smith & co of New York city, a firm who are thoroughly familiar with cement mills and the cement industry and who are an engineering firm as well as manufacturers. They also if not have few equals and no superiors. It is expected that it will take until sometime in May to complete the changes outlined, but when finished Elk Rapids will have within her corporate limits one of the most complete and up to date mills in the country.

Central Lake Torch: The Brown Cooperage Company and the Central Lake Lumber Company, have been consolidated and will both be operated hereafter under the latter name. Both concerns were practically owned by the same persons and were both under the personal management of Guy S Brown. The consolidation is for the purpose of simplifying the work and also lessening the stave mill so as to be started up in the seven months. This will only made heading and staves. The cooperage company's plant has been developing very fast and is now in a fair way to do as large a business as was done in former years when the firm was Liberty, Brown & Co. There is a large stock of logs being accumulated which insures a good long run this year. Mr. Brown has spent his whole business life in the work and is fully competent to carry the large business on to success. When the Liberty, Brown & Co. ceased operating here it was generally supposed that the career of our stave factory was ended, but through G. S. Brown's efforts the plant is once more in operation and bids fair to equal or exceed all previous records for business done.

To Grow Wheat in Montana.

"It do not believe that it will be many years before wheat will be grown on the plains of Montana," said L. C. Pettibone of Dawson, N Dr. in New York city. "There is already a remarkable change in the climatic conditions of the western part of North Dakota and eastern Montana. I believe that it is due largely to the opening up of Western Canada where so many thousands of people are establishing homes every year."

Mrs. Fairbanks' Social Secretary.

Miss Margaret Wade, society editor of a Washington paper, has been selected as social secretary by Mrs. Fairbanks, wife of the vice president. The appointment has caused some comment because about a year ago Miss Wade was barred from the white house in her professional capacity on account of her refusal to comply with certain regulations laid down by etiquette. She considered that the regulations in question were ignoble because they placed reporters in one part of the white house and did not allow them to go anywhere. Presumably the difficulty has been smoothed over.

What Need of Haste?

What is the cause of cannon cause, is there in the lessons now by the recent election to warrant haste in proceeding to tariff revision? It is safe to assume that the mass of Republicans, both among the leaders and the rank and file, are opposed to an extraordinary session for the purpose in question and that to consider double popular demand is back of the newspaper bid in favor of it.—Milwaukee Sentinel.

THE TARIFF ON WHEAT.

A Bad Time to Deprive the Farmer of His Protection.

There is only one way in which the American tariff on wheat could do the American farmer any good. That is the case of complete domestic consumption of the product. If there were no surplus to be exported the price of wheat to be governed by domestic conditions and the duty in case it might rise, as prices of rotter and woolen clothing and agricultural implements rise, above the foreign level. Then a tariff which kept out foreign wheat would give the American farmer the first direct advantage he ever got out of the tariff in his long and laborious life.

Is anybody so daft as to suppose that the American farmer can be induced to give up the tariff on wheat just at the psychological moment when he sees this blessed and unprecedented condition approach. For many months American demand for wheat has held the price far above the foreign level and reduced exports to the lowest point for years. Many persons believe that this condition is going to be permanent; that the older American farms are drawn into a higher purpose than wheat growing; that the development of American industry has increased the domestic demand for food, that we shall not go over wheat ten hundred here. Between $500 and $600 will be spent on this. This is just the beginning so, when the matter becomes possible, the harbor will be improved to such an extent that the larger boats can land there. The electric lightning proper is now a sure thing and Leland will soon take its place in the list of people—alive and up to date villages. The electric line proposition is laying dormant at present, awaiting the selling of the M & N E. It is possible that this road will extend its line to Leland and if it does, the electric line will not be necessary. The boat factory will be in operation by April 1 Work will be begun as soon as possible. One order has already been secured. This is from Chicago and is for a large fast boat to ply between Leland and the Manitous.

LAUGH BURNED ON SURGEON.

His Effort to Impress Students Was a Distinct Failure.

A famous Parisian surgeon is publicly rebuked by a young student for his pains and sufferings who had dared to impose upon the students a mock operation. As a result the surgeon slunk from the room. The surgeon stepped into a private and secured his client to look at him. "Now, Mr. X, he said to one of the students, "what is the matter with the man? From here you should be able to make a correct diagnosis simply by looking at the man's face, his bearing and the color of his hair." Mr. X. Mr. Y and Mr. Z having failed to make any diagnosis whatever the professor triumphantly declared: "You could be as at the first glance that the man is dead and dead. He fell into a state that he himself had frequently seen the patient. Then the patient spoke up: "You poor ignoramus it is my brother who is dead and dead, but he looks very much like me."

Gal-dang and so-shallow stuff for enough to fill an eight-foot line! Anyhow, put that right hand with a clamp around most such a concern as could shake up the man's own constitutional itself to the no, not quite so hard, Jim.

How long precisely it took your hero and heroine to get over the first embarrassment of their interest in one another, I don't know. Time, I suppose, was not the essence of the matter. Enough that they had talked with those in the same strain of mutual admiration and interest long enough for them to have reached the point where they felt at home with each other.

The girl was in her own room when Will had arrived, and had gone down to the parlor to receive him and introduce him to her father and mother. Mr. Mandle, the gentleman who had been the occasion of Will's visit, was not in the house, he said, but would be home in time for supper, and would be very glad to see Mr. Wickly.

If they were to be married soon, they concluded, by the mutual consent of the lovers, that Will should be installed in cottage. He had money enough, he said, but was not in any business which could take him away from his bride. Nothing, he thought, would be so good for him as to be married and settled down to work. He had been brought up to farming, and had a little money saved up from his share in his father's estate, which he had left in charge of his uncle, who was a farmer near Springfield, Illinois. He was fifty-one years old, and had never married because he had never found a woman he could love as he felt he could love Sophronia. He was grateful to her, he said, for having taught him what it was to love and be loved, and he was willing to take her and her happiness in his hands, and make the best of it that he could.

CHAPTER XV.

The week from the evening spent with the mind-reader was a busy one for Will and Sophronia. Time was precious, and they had to make the most of it. They had to see the minister, and have the banns published, and make a few purchases, and do a little visiting among Will's relations in the neighborhood of Springfield, and Will had to write a few letters to his uncle and his lawyer in Springfield, and Sophronia had to make a few calls on her friends, and to see her dressmaker, and to make a few purchases herself, and to get her mother to help her in the matter of her wardrobe. Will had to see his tailor about a few things, and to get his hair cut, and to buy a few articles of personal adornment himself. He had to see his lawyer about his will, and to make a few calculations in regard to the amount of money he could spare for the purchase of the farm and the stocking of it, and the purchase of a few articles of furniture for the house, and to make a few calculations in regard to the amount of money he could spare for the purchase of the furniture and the stocking of the farm, and to see his uncle about the matter, and to write him a few letters about it, and to see his lawyer about the matter, and to write him a few letters about it

WILLARD A. SMITH EDITOR.

CALIFORNIA LETTER.

William Clark Writes His Impressions of the Pacific Coast State.

Ramona, Cal., Jan. 30th, 1905.

To the Sentinel:

Permit me through the columns of your paper to say a few words that may be of interest to my friends and neighbors in and around Charlevoix, as I spent forty years of the best portion of my life there.

I have seen Charlevoix grow from a steamboat wooding point to one of the prettiest and cleanest towns that I have seen anywhere, and in to see this have I found a more energetic and class of farmers than there are here. My team still clings to the old associations.

I am spending the winter here with my father-in-law, T. J. Hodge, who has a pleasant home. It is a place of about 1,500 inhabitants, within a half mile of Santa Monica, at which place is located the Soldiers' Home, where 2,000 old veterans are cared for by the government. It is a beautiful place, located on an elevation, amid evergreen trees, and surrounded by beautiful walks, drives and rustic seats, and enjoying the benefit of the ocean breeze, the mountain zephyrs and the fragrance of flowers the year around. There was one thing I did not like to see, and that was the "canteen," where the veterans get their daily allowance of beer. They are well fed and cared for, and it seems that they could get along without the degrading influence of this thing.

There are other small towns within the radius of a few miles of Seattle, all connected with Los Angeles by a complete electric trolly system, which makes it very convenient to get around. The rates are reasonable.

In these lines one gets a fine view of the orange and lemon orchards, vineyards and gardens. In this vicinity the country is given up largely to gardening and poultry raising, with some dairy interests.

For a man who has money, it is a pleasant place in which to spend the winter, as he can see so many things that are new and strange to him, and enjoy the fine winter weather. I cannot say what the summer is like here.

Labor is not very plentiful here, except carpenters and painters. Some of these have work and some have not. Previous cost about the same here as at Charlevoix, except potatoes, which cost $1.25 per one hundred pounds. Horses are about the same price as at Charlevoix, cows a little higher.

Lands sell at from $400 to $600 per acre in this county. The barley fields are now about green as I write, it generally rains in the night and clears up in the morning, no heavy winds and no frost. We can see snow on one of the mountains called "Old Baldy." Other mountains are getting green. This is a table land surrounded by a range of mountains and the ocean. The soil is a black clay. There are large celery fields on the lower levels. The sugar beet fields are in another section of the valley. They have not begun to plant beets yet. I intend to visit this beet section. Some people contract crops here and get pneumonia, as well as in Michigan. Yours

MARINE NOTES.

Recent dispatches suggest the possibility that the river and harbor bill will be extinguished this session of congress.

Capt. George Weaver is booked for the steamer Pine Lake the coming season, and Capt. E. S. Small goes back in the tug Wheeler.

It is understood that, notwithstanding his recent troubles in the S. S. S., Capt. P. D. Campbell will sail the steamer Hoover the coming season.

Capt. Pete McCafferty will sail the tug J. V. Taylor the coming season. The Taylor will be employed chiefly in towing logs for the Charlevoix Lumber Company.

The steamer Joe. Gordon, of the Charlevoix-East Jordan route, is undergoing quite extensive improvements in hull and machinery, and will come out in the spring in fine shape.

Daniel W. Chipman, boiler inspector at Milwaukee for fifteen years, has resigned. Mr. Chipman will be remembered by old settlers of Charlevoix. In 1860 he was chief engineer in the propeller Fountain City, and after in the bay steamer Gen. R. E. Payne.

As announced last summer, the publisher of this paper was told by a capitalist of the Hart Line, and one of the owners, that a boat of that line would touch here next season both ways, between Green Bay and Mackinaw touching at St. James and Little Traverse Bay points.

Claims aggregating $900 have been filed by Cleveland parties against the steamers Buckley and Stafford of the Berry line, already limeled for sale February 8th. The company will probably bid in its own boats and effect a complete reorganization on a more substantial financial basis.

Capt. James Reid, of Sarnia, the well known wrecking master, bought the old time schooners Rutherford and Belle Hansomb, but has not decided upon what would be done with the vessels until next spring. The Rutherford is now at Sarnia, with her bottom badly damaged as a result of her stranding at the time the steamer Blanchard was lost on Lake Huron last fall. The Rutherford was formerly owned by Nelson & Butler, manufacturers of lumber in Chicago, and for several years has been the only full rigged sailing vessel on the lakes.

What will be one of the largest tugs on the great lakes is now in course of construction for Frank Perry at the yards of Johnston Brothers, Ferrysburg, Mich., to take the place of the Niagara, wrecked last year. The tug is to be 155 feet long, with a beam of 25 feet. Not only will the boat be one of the largest tugs on the lakes, but it will also be one of the most powerful. The fish tapedly will be about 300 tons. The boat will be constructed entirely of steel and will be ready for business the first of April. It will be used for towing pulpwood and other timber to the Fox River valley.

Another Bank.

Mr. F. E. Turrell, formerly of Bellaire, yesterday leased the Geiken building, on the northwest corner of Bridge and Main streets, and will this spring occupy it with a bank, with $25,000 capital. The building will be thoroughly overhauled and supplied with first class fixtures. The bank will be known as "The Charlevoix State Savings Bank."

Mr. Turrell is Most Worshipful Grand Master of Free and Accepted Masons of Michigan, and is well known throughout Northern Michigan.

Auspicious Omens

are instantly relieved, and perfectly healed, by Bucklen's Arnica Salve. At Hirschberg, Jr., of Norfolk, Va., writes: "Burnt my knee dreadfully; that it blistered all over. Bucklen's Arnica Salve stopped the pain, and healed it without a scar." Also heals all wounds and sores. 25c at F. G. Hixon & Co. druggist.

CHARLEVOIX

Its Harbor, and Its Commercial, Marine and Manufacturing Advantages.

CHARLEVOIX has one of the best harbors on the chain of lakes, with depth of channel from Lake Michigan of fifteen feet. Charlevoix harbor is open later in the winter and earlier in the spring than any other Lake Michigan harbor north of Frankfort, making the port an ideal one for winter railroad freight transfer to the north and west shores. Charlevoix is coming to be known as the chief marine center of the straits region. It is surrounded by as fine farming section as there is in Michigan, and the area of farming and grazing land is rapidly increasing. One of the largest and best Portland Cement plants in the State is in progress of construction, and it has a large and completed beet sugar factory that will do business before the year closes. It has unrivalled attractions for many kinds of industrial enterprises, and is the most beautifully located town in Michigan. Five churches, excellent schools, first-class electric light plant, and the best water that ever came out of the earth.

BEAVER ISLAND NEWS.

Mail twice weekly now. Will fish seen and Sam Frost carriers.

On Monday evening Mrs. Mamie Gibson gave a card party at her home.

Capt. Beaner has a number of fishtugs on High Island who are getting out cedar ties and posts.

Capt. Watts, of the "Heaven Queen" has been very ill with heart trouble but is much better at this writing.

Raymond McDonald is running a swing on the company's timber land doing a logging job for the B. I. L. Co.

The residents of Garden Island are frequent visitors to the Beaver. They drive back and forth with horse and sleigh, this being their mail and business point.

Capt. John McCann is hoeing himself with the head clerkship in the office of James McCann & Sons during the interval between the close and opening of navigation.

Mr. Walter Stetson of Lodington, who was an employee of the B. I. L. Co. was taken with an attack of Appendicitis last week. At the last report he was doing very nicely with good prospects for rapid recovery.

Parties who have taken logging jobs for the company are Fred Gallagher, High and W. Hyde, John Roach and Fred Sundenburg. The latter has his camp on High Island where the company have a valuable tract of pine and hemlock.

The ice harvest is nearly completed on the Island. The Wolverine Fish Co. is the only firm who have not yet begun operations along this line. The firm of James McCann have contracted the amount they have secured at nearly 1600 tons. All put up in two days.

Letters from James Gallagher, son of our genial Bowery, reports his being a pleasant time in Detroit preliminary to his taking a position in the land office at Lansing. He states that he made a trip to Toronto where he visited relatives whom he had never seen.

The social season on the island is in full swing now. The evening of Feb.—— was there with three parties given. Mr. and Mrs. J. Hankey, Mr. and Mrs. Owen Gillespie both entertained at cards. Mr. and Mrs. P. O'Donnell made their friends feel very much at home with Pat.

Father Zuggler reports the receipt of a telegram through our loyal friend of the Hoovers, W. A. Smith, from Hon. Darragh, stating that the appropriation for the Hoover Island harbor of refuge could be passed this session and is at present up to Senator Burrows, who will see it through the Senate.

The Beaver Island Lumber Co have had a splendid winter so far for the carrying on of their large business interests on the Island. Their camps are full and doing good work getting out the logs to the right of way and loading cars while the mill is running full time. The railroad has not been blocked yet this winter, and altogether the business of the firm is in a prosperous condition. Not the least of their valied industry is the stave mill which is running in connection with the saw mill. It is turning out from twenty to twenty-two thousand staves of excellent quality every day. The mill is under the management of Mr. F. Budke who is running the mill under contract.

Stave Trouble Foreseen.

It needs but little foresight, to tell, that when your stomach and liver are bad effected, grave trouble is hard, unless you take the proper medicine for your disease, as Mrs. John A. Young, of Gay, N. Y., did. She says "I had neuralgia of the liver and stomach, my heart weakened, and I could not eat. I was very bad for a long time, but as Electric Bitters, I found just what I needed, for they quickly relieved and cured me." Sold under guarantee by F. G. Hixon & Co. druggist, at 50c a bottle.

A TYPICAL SOUTHERN HOUSE

Either a Rambling Bungalow or Modern Frame Structure.

Externally the typical southern home of the pioneer is either a rambling bungalow like Witchwood—one of the most attractive places near Asheville—an Italianesque structure with white columns, a modified part of some old antebellum mansions for the like of which the south was famous—or a modern frame structure quite architectural and comfort, with leaded windows, lattice-bearers, and an open terrace built upon a foundation of gray stone with coping of the same, or modification of these three ideas.

In the interior arrangement, says a writer in the House Beautiful, the southern residence has always been called upon to meet not only the demands of convenience and comfort, but also those of hospitality and entertainment as well, for the southerner is decidedly a social being, given to entertainment in all its forms. This characteristic was not only gratified, but actually fostered by the big rooms of the ante-bellum homes of the old south.

Soon after the war the population of the sliding door made it possible for small rooms to perform the functions of large ones on occasion, and for a while the southern builder cut his house up after the manner of his northern brother, though not quite in the same restricted pro-rata time. That phase may now be said to have passed, and general taste in the south is once more in favor of spacious chambers. So genuine is this preference, that even in small houses the space usually divided between two rooms is now given to one. Usually the room thus formed is a long one, a sort of salon.

Fishing Industry Statistics.

Japan is the leading fishing nation to-day, although the value of her sea products is surpassed by that of two other countries, The United States, outside of Alaska, and Great Britain which produces about 1,400,000 worth annually, and Japan produces about $19,000,000 worth. Japan leads in the proportion of the total population engaged in the fishing industry, in the actual number of people living by the industry, in the relative importance of fish products to the country's economic economy, and in the support given by the government to the industry.

Unmeasurable Woman.

His wife asked him in vain to bet. Talking to the woman's page and starting out the first article that attracted his attention, it was by a distinguished medical authority on the subject of correct breathing and began: "As a means for preventing wrinkles in the face it is certain that the practice of keeping the mouth shut is one of the most effective." "That will do, sir!" she snapped. "I asked to be entertained, not to be insulted."

—The illness of James M. Fetts was announced in these columns last week. As we went to press Mr. Fetts seemed to be improving, but Mr. Fetts' his condition took a turn for the worse, which assumed his physician and attendants. The case is grave, but seemed to be a bad case of gallstones. This was put under control, but soon after a serious gathering developed in one of his feet, which denoted a possible condition of blood poisoning. Mrs. Fetts was summoned from her home in Indiana, and arrived Tuesday. At this writing, Wednesday afternoon, Mr. Fetts seems better, and hopes for his recovery are revived.

—An official of the Pere Marquette is authority for the statement that the road never had as much business to handle as now. Such a rush is on, he says, that the P. M. has been obliged to turn down, to a large degree, the through freight business in order to take care of local shippers. Improvements are now being planned, and when the road receives its new equipment it is expected little trouble in handling freight will be experienced.

—The L. T. P. A. annual ball at the K. P. hall Tuesday night, was a very successful and enjoyable affair. A bountiful banquet was served at eleven. Everyone who was present says it was a fine party. We are glad to note that the big attendance of the S. S. S. were present, a fact that denotes a better feeling between the two marine organizations. The editor of this paper acknowledges receipt of an invitation, but he was unable to attend.

—In the window of the Wilbur building, recently occupied by the H. M. Perry Seed Co. a placard has been placed upon which is written the following. "The S. S. S. will occupy these rooms after May 10th, by order of Capt. Pete Campbell." In an interview yesterday with Capt. Pete Flinn, recently elected president of the S. S. S., the usually genial gentleman was considerably incensed. "For a man who but two weeks ago was ingeniously defeated for the office of president this usurpation of authority deserves very mild notice. The rooms are all right and we will probably go there, but Pete Campbell is not president, as he will find out at the next meeting." Capt Pete Flinn is not so very long ago that Capt. Pete and Capt. Sam Rose made an effort to disrupt the S. S. S. and merge it in the L. T. P. A. Capt. Sam's name has been proposed for membership, and the others will come home to roost when the ballot is taken. At the last meeting Capt. H. C. Flynn was elected to membership, and Capt. H. C. Corkett's name was referred to a committee. A bill from Capt. Wilbur for rent, fuel and incidentals, amounting to $16, was, after considerable discussion, cut fifty per cent. The "incidental" items not being sufficiently explicit. Moreover, it was shown that tobacco charged for in the bill, had been contributed by members. A further item of "stationery" was cut out entirely on a satisfactory showing that the stationery in question was N. M. T. property. Capt. Wilbur was given one week to clear himself of a charge of conspiring to "defy" the S. S. S. A resolution thanking President Pete Flinn for his choice of local inspectors for this district was passed by a rising vote, and the secretary was instructed to transmit a copy to the president and to the inspectors particularly the latter. It was also voted to tender a complimentary banquet to the inspectors at the Cultus restaurant on the occasion of their official visit to the port of Charlevoix. The fire drill, ordered by Fire Chief Finucan, was postponed one week on account of bad weather.

—The telegraph division of the weather bureau is asking for short measurements at Beaver Island, which indicates that they are preparing for the cable job.

—The SENTINEL is running a good map of Charlevoix, to afford our subscribers and others an opportunity to send copies to their friends in other parts. You cannot do a better thing in aiding the Board of Commerce, than by sending your SENTINEL somewhere when you have read it.

—Young men don't swear. There is no occasion for it outside of a printing office, where it is useful when the paper is behind time, days as also. It also comes handy in proof reading, and is indispensible when the ink works bad and when the press begins to buck. It is sometimes brought in to use when the foreman is mad, and it has been known to entirely relieve the tired feeling of the editor when he looks over the paper after it is printed. Outside the printing office it is a foolish thing.

—The appointments of the Northern Michigan Transportation company boats, the Illinois and Missouri, though not yet announced officially, are as follows. The Illinois, Capt. Frank Richardson of Manistee; the Missouri, Capt. William Finnan of Charlevoix. Capt. William Franklin of Traverse City, who served for many years as first officer on the Northern Michigan line boats, has severed his connection with that line and accepted the position as captain of the Sidney O. Neff, which is a Traverse City boat, the property of A. Grellick.

—Another delightful evening was spent by the C. O. D. club when they met with Miss Ruth Smith last Thursday evening. A mock trial, in which the plumpish of the mock wedding of the previous meeting were again in evidence, was carried through in a most creditable manner. It was a very sensational trial, and at one time things began to look serious, but the dignity of the judge prevented any unseemly disorder among the witnesses and attorneys. An elegant luncheon was served by Miss Ruth, assisted by Miss Florence Smith, and the club adjourned to meet with Miss Belle McNeill, Pinkney Ave., Thursday night of this week. The young ladies are arranging a very entertaining literary and musical program for this meeting. We are also informed that one or two of our prominent men, who are well known literary members, just because the girls found out that they were "rehearsing" during the progress of the trial at the last meeting.

—Those who were disappointed at not hearing the Kaffir Boys last year remember the date—Monday, Feb. 20.

—"Why fret, worry, stew and fume? What's the use, anyway? One might just as well be decently content. We can't arrange the affairs of his globe as we can put to order the pans and kettles in the kitchen pantry. There are too many people around trying to do the same thing. What if it is winter now? The summer hasn't been sidetracked forever. The evening is as beautiful as the day, if we only have sense enough to figure it. Even troubles have a certain use and value. The big ones make us forget the little ones and the little ones should teach us that they are of no account anyway. They all change about so often that we have no chance of suffering from monotony. Today's headaches, yesterday's annoyance, tomorrow's disappointment, are all parts of the mysterious calendar of human sentience. Who would wish to sit forever in the sunshine and be saturated with warmth. It's lots of fun to have a snowstorm and think how lovely it will be when the violets get busy and the fragile crocus tells the grass blades to stand aside and let it pass.

Just Usual Observations.

We get it on pretty good authority that the "restricting clause" of the late David Ward's will expires in May, 1906, and that after that date a policy of expansion will be inaugurated. It is rumored that a sawmill will be built on South Arm, near the Ward dock, to which the track of the D. & C. R. R. already is built, and that the road will be extended to Charlevoix.

The writer of this received from the lips of David Ward himself in the Sentinel office but a little more than a year before his death, that it was his ultimate purpose to build into Charlevoix, and that is why he named his road the "Detroit and Charlevoix." The advantages of such extension were then gone over thoroughly, and Mr. Ward fully concurred in our views.

The advantages to both Charlevoix and East Jordan of the extension of this road cannot be overestimated. The construction of a mill near the head of South Arm would be of great industrial value to East Jordan, and a direct lake Michigan connection for our sister village would be of great business value, to say nothing of the advantages to be derived from being on a practically trunk line into Detroit, which, with the large summer travel that would be diverted to it, would afford an excellent outlet.

Very few people stop to think that, in reality, a gap of but four miles intervenes between Charlevoix and two trunk lines—the Michigan Central and the G. R. & I., and that with this gap filled we would be home more frequently than we now are. And the beauty of it is, the cheapness with which this gap can be filled. From the Ward dock to Ironton the route would be along the level lake front, and from Ironton to Charlevoix the old Ironton branch grade of the West Michigan still exists, and has received, with the exception of the "Y" from the ownership of the railroad company to that of the original owners.

Charlevoix has had "an anchor out to windward," in contemplation of this extension, and it has been prepared to do the proper thing in terminal ground. No one who has a true understanding of existing conditions with reference to this matter doubts for a moment that this outlet will soon come to Charlevoix and East Jordan, whose interests in the matter are identical.

And this situation is given a deeper meaning, by the fact that these are days of rapid railroad development. Unquestionably the Michigan Central people are in a receptive mood, considering the chance of securing a good big chunk of the rapidly increasing freight traffic of this locality. It may be safely assumed that the good prospect of Michigan Central and G. R. & I. connection at Charlevoix is the near future.

How is this for Texas?

Col. John Hicks of the Oshkosh (Wis.) Northwestern is in San Antonio, Texas, and from that place writes disappointedly as follows to his paper on the subject of the weather:

The weather, this season, has been a great disappointment all over the country. San Antonio usually has mild sunny winters. Last year there was a continuous succession of warm bright days from Christmas until April. I have been here now eighteen days and only four or five have been pleasant. It has been raw and cold with high winds, and misty rain almost every day. The feeling of discomfiture on the part of some of my San Antonio friends when they try to apologize for the weather this year, is absolutely comical. Every resident seems to feel that he is in some measure responsible for the weather and he is heartily ashamed of the brand we are having this winter. Few of the houses are properly heated and the suffering while not acute or dangerous is annoying. Nine out of ten people you meet, residents as well as visitors, are suffering from coughs, cold or influenzas. Rheumatism is also getting in its work in great shape and I don't see that there is much less suffering here than at home.

Graves' "Political Science."

We glean the following interesting item from the Petoskey Daily News of Monday:

"Prof. M. O. Graves has received notification of his recent election as a member of the American Academy of Political and Social Science, enclosing also a request to prepare a paper for the next meeting of the society which will be held next summer in Philadelphia.

The professor's topic for the Philadelphia paper should be "What I Know About Flopping." We know of no one in the arena of politics who could write a more interesting paper on tightening charges in politics.

State Convention.

At the republican state convention held in Grand Rapids Tuesday the following ticket was nominated.

Justice of the Supreme Court, Joseph H. Moore; regents of the university, Dr. W. H. Sawyer, of Hillsdale and Arthur Hill, of Saginaw; board of education W. J. McKone, of Albion.

Thos. J. O'Brien was both temporary and permanent chairman of the convention.

It needs but little foresight, to tell, that when your stomach and liver are bad effected, grave trouble is hard, unless you take the proper medicine for your disease, as Mrs. John A. Young, of Gay, N. Y., did. She says "I had neuralgia of the liver and stomach, my heart weakened, and I could not eat. A Few Words About Prescriptions.

YOUR doctor fights disease with medicine. If the medicine is not right, he cannot conquer disease. If the druggist does his duty the medicine will be right, and your doctor will stand a fair chance of winning the victory. In no other branch of the drug business should the details receive more care and attention than in the prescription department. Every detail there is important. Realizing this fact, thoroughness is a feature of the prescription case and every prescription dispensed at this store has the personal attention of the proprietor and a careful checking system makes mistakes impossible. Nothing but the purest drugs and best pharmaceuticals are used namely those manufactured by the well known chemical house of Park Davis & Co. A "Mass" Democratic Convention.

Mr. H. A. Jersey, and Nir. W. Lewis, secretary and chairman, respectively, of the democratic county committee, are out with a call for a "democratic mass convention" to be held at the law office of H. A. Jersey, in Boyne City, Thursday, Feb. 26th, to nominate a candidate for circuit judge.

We crave the pardon of chairman Lewis for naming the convention first in the above paragraph. We take the liberty merely because we regard the secretary as the greater demagog of the two, and the author of the pompous mouth words which constitute the call. We accord to our friend Bill all the honor that is due him as the de facto, guide of the fast disintegrating remnant of the Charlevoix county democracy, and we confess to our admiration for his nerve in assuming the fatherhood of the faithful throughout the 17th Judicial Circuit. But we ascribe to his chancellor, the Lamb thaf of the democratic court—Jersey—the genius that leads Czar Bill into trouble.

You will note, gentle reader, that this is to be a "mass" convention, and that it is to be held "at the law office of H. A. Jersey." We understand Boyne City has an opera house—a good one—and we are told that Bill has a private warehouse that is probably empty at this time of the year. In the righteous cause of judicial reform we have no doubt either one of these auditoriums would have been gladly tendered by their owners, free of cost.

But lawyer Jersey's office is large enough—considerably larger than his practice—and there will be ample room in the place for all those in the circuit who do not believe F. W. Mayne to be the proper man to elect to the judgship. The "mass" convention will unquestionably be a success.

But the appeal is most pathetic Mr. Jersey, ignoring the ordinary rules of grammar, says that, "democrats as the demands of the people in this regard are baffled and delayed, and as the next best means, Fellow Citizens, we ask you to join with us in convention to nominate as candidate for Circuit Judge, some lawyer, most conspicuous for learning, integrity and impartiality, some one who, if elected, will faithfully discharge the duties of this important office."

Perhaps, in the circuit, there may be found a man who answers to these requirements and who will, under pressure, acknowledge himself a democrat, but we venture the prediction that when this "mass" convention shall have been held and its momentous duties discharged, its nominee will live in Boyne City, and his name will be Henry A. Jersey.

What though the erminе nerves vests upon his shoulders! In it not written that no man is to be a most distinguished honor to have been named in "mass" convention for that exalted trust? When Mr. Jersey gets where all good lawyers "there up," and the record of his life is written, will it not thrill the hearts of his surviving progeny to read that in the April election of 1892 their illustrious ancestor received 47 votes for judge of the 17th judicial circuit of Michigan?

The work of the state tax commission and railroad taxation, were two subjects discussed before the Grand Rapids business men at their board of trade banquet on Tuesday evening of last week. It is quite fortunate that those subjects can be discussed by men capable of fairly presenting them before bodies of business men who will give to them the same kind of consideration they give to other matters affecting their interests. The state tax commission and railroad taxation have been made matters of political discussion in Michigan throughout recent years to such an extent as to prevent their real relations to the business interest of the state from receiving the consideration they deserved. The average state business man, farmer or day laborer desired only justice and equality in taxation, and all the ways and means through which reliable information can be given as to what constitutes justice and equality in taxation are worthy of approval and adoption.

Legislative Correspondence.

To the SENTINEL.

Some people in the state perhaps think Lansing must be a delightful place in the intervals between sessions, not realizing that their capital city is one of the most thrifty and progressive towns in the state. Its manufacturing interests are large, numerous and varied, the rapidity in planning the building of a new auditorium factory erected in the last six months stands out across two entire years, and a record nearly as fast, and these are to be duplicated next spring, and building owners that the houses erected here in the past year number 150. A tour of twenty towns and people that can do that deserve get lonesome when the legislature adjourns. One of the new buildings was a Methodist church, dedicated last Sunday, and the prospectus gave responsible with contributions of $14,000 in excess of the debt they were asked to pay. It is to house the oldest congregation here, whose first service was held sixty years ago. Rev. Lewis Cottrell preached the sermon in 1841.

The number of committees of the two houses that have been engaged the past week in visiting the prisons, reformatories, asylums, homes and schools of the state, number more than forty, with a total membership of nearly two hundred. So it is evident that when they were all out there could not be left of the one hundred and forty members of the two houses enough even to call for the regular order, and some of them have had an easier week's work than they have while in session here. We should be glad that the legislature have treated them well, and we need not call it a "junket," for in any wise unseemly or unsuitable on either side that they were entertained or dined by the people of Ypsilanti, or Marquette, or Houghton, or by the Soldiers' Home or the Agricultural College.

In pursuing of their responsibilities at the Agricultural College, the committees of that institution were able to "sample the goods," in a sense not in the nature of the rare practicals for the committees upon most of the other state institutions, for the elegant banquet was in the several courses and by its entirely a product of pupils of the school. It was prepared and served by the young ladies of the cooking classes, and the agricultural and horticultural departments were the sources of such of the supplies as came within their scope. The college was forty years old before it offered a department for women, and in the eight years since then the institution has experienced its most rapid growth and its most abundant prosperity. The legend of the fifty odd buildings that adorn the campus, erected five years ago, is for their accommodation, including both class rooms and dormitories and the class rooms including kitchens and dining rooms, sewing rooms and laundry, manual training in woodwork and physical training in gymnasium, art and home decoration.

Besides the same college courses as for the young men to the agricultural department there are required to the women's department full courses in domestic science and domestic art. The latter extends to dressmaking, millinery, sign art needlework, and to taste judging and selecting materials, as well as slaughtering, cutting and fitting. The domestic science classes include general cookery, cooking for the sick, nurses' course, advanced cookery, and household economy, embracing laundry, home nursing, house hold accounts, interior decoration, sanitary science, domestic chemistry, et cetera. These are designed to fit a young woman for directing all the affairs of a household so as to produce the best results with the least cost, not only of money but of time and nerve and muscle, and not only to produce a first-class dinner at the minimum expense, but to select and procure the materials, to know their cost before hand, and the chemical properties and the nutritive and sanitary values of every element that goes into it. In view of the acute stage which the servant girl problem has reached, and the unpromising outlook for housemaking among the army of girls now in attendance at the schools and offices and similar homes, we may well believe, if the Agricultural College can turn loose upon the state of Michigan an army of such students, the state of Michigan will cheerfully pour into the lap of the Agricultural College all the money that the work shall require. At present there are about two hundred enrolled in the women's department, but the room accommodations for one hundred and twenty.

The total enrollment in regular classes of the college is about one thousand at the present time, which is three to four times what it was ten years ago. Under the liberal policy of the state in these recent years the growth has been rapid, and in the marked advance now taking place in popular esteem of the agricultural professions, that growth will be more rapid in the years now to follow, if the capacity of the institution shall keep pace with the demand. But President Snyder says if the latter terms of this year shall bring considerable accessions it will be a pleeding problem how to how take care of them. This winter they have been compelled to cut out one of the special short courses announced, that on sugar beet culture, for want of laboratory room, the two hundred and ninety-one regular students in chemistry occupying the entire accommodation.

The series of low rate excursions which have brought visitors in large numbers from various parts of the state to the college in the past three or four summers have done much to acquaint the people of the state with the institution and to spread a more adequate knowledge of its importance and value. The farmer, who a few years ago looked upon a college education as important for a professional career but of little practical value on the farm, and his educated son who regarded a return to the farm as a disenhancement of the advantages of his education, have been rapidly reversing their estimates, and are becoming eager to apply the institution of the class room and the experiment station to the work of the fields, and they have learned what numbers of them did not know, that they have at the capital of their state an institution for their work standing at the very head of its class, with an equipment that is an astonishment to them, a campus the largest in the world, with more than half a hundred splendid buildings and all of them already used to the limit, with need for more and larger. What has been done in the result of the far sighted wisdom with which our state affairs have been directed, and the same control be prepared to go forward in the same line as fast and as far as the public need and the popular liberality shall direct.

Governor Warner's appointment of I. W. McKone of Albion to the vacancy on the state board of education in place of P. W. Kelley, elected superintendent, is only for the brief period until the April election, but it gives him an advantageous position in the canvass for the election. He graduated from the Ypsilanti Normal seventeen years ago, and has been teaching ever since, and last December he was elected president of the state teachers' association.

There has been introduced in the senate, up to the adjournment Saturday 26, eighty eight bills, and in the house, one hundred and sixty-one. Two years ago the adjournment for the recess was a week later, but the senate at that date had only eighty-six bills, and the house two hundred and ninety six, notwithstanding the large proportion of skeleton bills then introduced only for titles, of which now there are none.

Captain John W. Hasner of Ann Arbor, appointed by State Treasurer Glazier as Tax Attorney in place of the deputy, Mr. Fowler, resigned to take a bank position in Detroit, assumed charge of the office last week. Mr. Glazier himself has been suffering from a rheumatic stiffness, but had so improved that he expected to come to the capital in a day or two. HORTUS

A "MOVING" TRAGEDY

WHY WOMAN THOUGHT THERE WAS NO GOOD IN LIFE.

Forgetfulness That Made Trouble for All Parties in the Case—And the Furniture Men Were More Than Ordinarily Mad.

The woman was agitated. "I don't believe in having women visit, anyhow, nowadays," said she. "There is no truth nor whole. Happiness is a myth and charity is thing of the past."

"What in the world has happened?" asked the woman's companion.

"I'm moving," that lady replied, and, though she said no more, the other woman understood and sighed, for she knew that she would be in press her with questions nor to try to soothe her tortured soul.

"It isn't just an ordinary moving, either," went on the woman, as though glad to relieve her mind. "When we left the house in which we had lived for nearly nine years, to go to our country place this summer, we rented it for the winter to a family in the city we wanted go into a more musical circle. We did it beautifully. We had a lovely moment, trying not to think of our new domicile but best we could we sent for the man who always moves our things and told him we would be ready in ten days to move.

"When he arrived in the hottest of packing up, no one thought to tell him that we were not going back to the old residence. He drove away, and we came to on the earth and went to work to find another place suitable for the furniture. It did not cause Noah cares on account, and we stored in the cold and cheerless rooms and every nights rather.

"We had a very nice colored man arrived with the furniture. They were shorter rates than we'd had were feasible. They said they had been paid at six and ten hours for hours waiting for some one to come with the key and let them in. Finally one of the men went into a near by drug store to warm his hands, and the druggist, who got all the news of the neighborhood by telepathy, told him that we were going into a new house, and where it was. I don't think they had good have been so mad about it. It was perfectly natural for us to forget to tell them where we were going.

"The women's companions made no remark. They felt she was not in a humor to argue with.

"I must hurry home now," she said, after a minute. "All of the cheerful things are in what is going to be the drawing room after a while. At least, we all of the furniture, and after we had got them there some one suggested that we might have sent them down on the dumb waiter. There is neither elegance in man nor sensibility in woman any more—no, there isn't. You should see our cook and hear the men who are moving her," said the woman—and hastened back to Baltimore Now.

The Canvas Was Clean Then.

William F. King of the Merchants' association tells a story of a man of Kansas who came to the city and opened a store in a small country town. The canvas was soiled and torn in places and for his contempt of everything that was not strictly illustrated. One of the pet aversions was a young fellow in the town who used as an artist, and some had taken some boards to painting at the current large sits. Finally, however, the old man was persuaded to put an "art department" in his place, and that he believed any more in art, and because he believed that if there were fools who wanted to spend their money on pictures and crayons, he ought to get it as any one else. The young painter heard of it and took down his latest production, hoping to find in Uncle Jonas a ready market for home products.

"How much will you give me for it, Uncle?" he asked.

The old man squinted at it for a minute or two. "Ten cents $1 I reckon," he said.

"But, Uncle Jonas," the artist protested, "the canvas cost more than that."

"I guess it did," said the old skeptic, "but you must remember, my son, that the war was clean then."—New York Times.

The Days of Our Youth.

Oh, talk not to me of a time gone by,
An hour with a pang recalling,
But let me live over the happy days
And the joyous days of our youth.

Oh, the days of our youth are the days of
And the joyous days of our youth
Are worth all your labors, though ever
Oh, the days of our youth.

What are garlands and crowns to the
The fair as a dream fleeting by
Then away with all pomp to the land
Give me back the days of our youth.

What care I for the wealth that can
Give back the days of our youth?
Let the miser pine and toil and grasp
Give me back the days of our youth.

Oh, gimme some more! I want to see
Give back the days of our youth.
Let the world go hang, I care not Give me back the days of our youth.

—Lord Byron.

Virtue's Quick Reward.

"Nothing ever better illustrated to me," remarked the doctor, "the old adage Virtue is its own reward than an experience I had the other day. Called for the first time to a patient who was desperately ill, in addition to being penniless, I gave her five dollars with which to procure the necessities of life. The next morning I received a note from her not to call again. Later I learned she had called in a homeopathic physician, to whom she paid a fee of two dollars, and with the remainder of my charitable contribution she paid a monthly instalment on a phonograph."

Turned Down by Government.

"Our Tommy has given us all hope of a government position

"Why, my?" How did that happen?

"Well, they took him before the civil service board, and he failed on geography, an' spellin', and 'rithmetic, an' sich, they scarcitly tried him."

"An' what's he goin' to do now?"

"Why, I guess he'll have to go to high school!"—Atlanta Constitution.

Women in Paraguay.

In Paraguay the women are in the proportion of seven to one as compared with the men. The consequence is that the men are taken the greatest care of and everything which is unpleasant or might be risky to the life of a man is done by the women. The streets are cleaned, ships are loaded, cows are driven by them, and it is even said that they have taken part in their country's wars, acting as substitutes for their menkind.

IN FRENZY FOR REFORM.

Republicans Who Are "Doing Democratic" on Tariff Revision.

The Chicago Tribune shows signs of one of its old fits. Now that the election is over the Tribune seems to be doing Democrats on the tariff revision question which is perhaps better, though hardly more consistent, than going Democratic before election in Presidential years.

"The present tariff," says the Tribune in a leading editorial, "is bad and it has been reiterating in furious rhetoric the same thing daily for a few nights—the injurious and an alcoholic lick." This is more demonstrative than the Democratic St. Louis platform, which only spoke of "the robber tariff," but the substantial difference is not different. That which is "injurious and an abomination" ought to be dealt with about as a "robber" is dealt with.

These Republican tariff reformers, like the Chicago Tribune, are laying out a land that they will get for side to plow. They are proceeding on the assumption that Democratic, and not Republican, principles triumphed in the election. The assumption will not do at all. Neither will it contribute to the success of Republican revision.

It is the Democratic party that received the votes, but that was not the party that promised to revise the tariff "a rocker tariff," if the court knows itself and it thinks it does. Whatever revision may be the present session of congress, it will not be a Republican revision, it will be a Democratic revision on the same principles which underlie the present tariff.

Addition is the proper treatment of "injurious and abominations." On that theory of the tariff question there is a fairer and a hypocrisy. If nothing but treating the existing tariff as injurious and an abomination will satisfy a radical tariff reformer of the school of Tribune, then it is clear that the Republican party can't satisfy him. It can't satisfy Uncle Sam.

No Tariff Revision.

The feeling seems to be spreading at Washington that there will be no extra session of congress to tackle tariff revision. The idea is that having run record the President that whenever tariff tinkering begins business becomes unsettled and party interests are jeopardized, because a single session is not long enough and certain interests of the committees of certain Congressmen will clash with others, and the end will be unsatisfactory to all.

It is pointed out by those who are been posted on the subject that the tariff of the late Hunter session is in less ugly shape than it was when it was first reported from the committee, and after we had got them there some one suggested that we might have sent them down on the dumb waiter. There is neither gallantry in man nor sensibility in woman any more—no, there isn't. You should see our cook and hear the men who are moving her," said the woman—and hastened back to Baltimore Now.

Birth of the Moon.

Year by year the moon is getting a few inches more distant and receding the argument, year by year, in the opinion of the moon was nearer to us. Prof. George Darwin has shown that long, long ago, the moon revolved close to the earth and still earlier formed part of this globe. From that time to the present he calculates at least 54,000,000 years must have elapsed. The birth of the moon took place therefore somewhere about that date in the past. Sir Robert Ball observed that when the moon was nearer to us its attraction must have produced enormous tidal waves far greater than those that wash our shores to-day, and he suggested that these tides, in their powerful revulsions and wasting of the land, accelerated the phenomenal force and so reduced the tremendous period which the moon's orbit demanded.—London Telegraph.

The Northport depot is again an established fact. Yesterday the work crew with two carloads of lumber and two cars of carpenter tools and twenty-five men went down the line and began the operations which had such a summary plucking a year ago. A meeting was held at Gills Pier Friday evening by the officers of the M. & N. E. to consider the proposition of extension of the branch from Protsvent. The meeting was attended by J. J. Hubbell, representing the M. & N. E. and all farmers interested in the right-of-way were present. Gills Pier is only four miles from Northport and six miles from Leland and about the same from Suttons Bay, and if the extension is assured no doubt the stress of the railway traffic to the Leelanau Peninsula will be referred from the erratic service another winter.

A collision occurred at Bellaire Saturday evening at 6:30 o'clock on the Pere Marquette railroad, in which one engine was badly smashed, another was considerably damaged and a freight was completely demolished, even to the trucks. The engines involved were freight engines No. 8 and No. 106. The former made up run to Frees, as usual, and backed back to Bellaire, where it goes around its train to head properly. No. 106, it appears, was at Bellaire at that time and also, for some reason, started to go around its train from the opposite direction in which No. 8 was backing. Neither engineer saw the other engine until too late to prevent the collision and both locomotives were piled in the ditch, the engineers and firemen escaping injury miraculously.

Postmaster George Hall of Traverse City is starting in the disbursement of the postoffice department, along with other lucky postmasters, though the payments are not large enough to clog the wheels of the disbursing agency. Postmaster Hall's are for and two children are left: Dr. Archie deficiency estimates like the others. Dr. of Buffalo, N. Y.; Josie M., who and though it is only two cents, the kept house for her father, Jessie R., postmaster general has sent a com- at home; Lizzie G. who is an attendant munication to congress informing at the asylum in this city; Edwin, that amount body that he had no available funds for its payment. The other amounts due are twelve cents due to the postmaster of Petoskey, thirteen cents on an old account of Sylvester J. Weir, the Cadillac postmaster, and twenty-five cents due the postmaster of Marquette.

Wm. W. Mitchell, president of the Cobbs & Mitchell Lumber Co., announces that an iron furnace which will directly employ over 100 men and as many more indirectly will be located either near the Cadillac chemical Works or the Cummer, Diggins & Chemical Works in Cadillac each of which institutions has an output of over 200,000 bushels of charcoal daily, which will be used in the furnace. The company will be capitalized at $250,000 and the plant will have a daily output of 100 tons charcoal pig iron. This industry is the direct outcome of the establishment of chemical plants whose causes the charcoal, and it marks a growth in Cadillac's manufacturing lines in an entirely new direction.

The Petoskey Democrat publishes the following from its line of twenty-five years ago: We mentioned last week that logs had been got out for a saw mill on the Charlevoix state road near Hannahs, some six miles west of here, and now we are able to state that Mr. E. M. Cowley has contracted to build a circular saw mill and have it in running operation about the first of May next. Ira Stauffer, the wide awake real estate dealer in that neighborhood, says he is bound to have a postoffice out there in the town of Mayer, before long, and that he will be postmaster at the cross roads. If he should get the lucrative position of postmaster at the corners, he will of course put a "spool table" in the back room, just for the accommodation of the boys from Petoskey, when they come out to see him.

Archibald D. Carpenter of Williamsburg died Saturday at the age of 61 years, of liver complaint. He was a druggist at Williamsburg and had lived in that village about seven years. During the past year or two he has been in rather poor health and especially so the last few months. Mr. Carpenter was a veteran of the Civil war, having served in the 11th Michigan cavalry. Thirty years ago he moved to Born-Ville, where he resided until moving to Williamsburg. His wife died nine years ago.

CHARLEVOIX

Its Harbor, and Its Commercial, Marine and Manufacturing Advantages.

CHARLEVOIX has one of the best harbors on the chain of lakes, with depth of channel from Lake Michigan of fifteen feet. Charlevoix harbor is open later in the winter and earlier in the spring than any other Lake Michigan harbor north of Frankfort, making the port an ideal one for winter railroad freight transfer to the north and west shores. Charlevoix is coming to be known as the chief marine center of the straits region. It is surrounded by as fine farming section as there is in Michigan, and the area of farming and grazing land is rapidly increasing. One of the largest and best Portland Cement plants in the State is in progress of construction, and it has a large and completed beet sugar factory that will do business before the year closes. It has unrivalled attractions for many kinds of industrial enterprises, and is the most beautifully located town in Michigan. Five churches, excellent schools, first-class electric light plant, and the best water that ever came out of the earth.

A Few Words About Prescriptions.
YOUR doctor fights disease with medicine. If the medicine is not right, he cannot conquer disease. If the druggist does his duty the medicine will be right, and your doctor will stand a fair chance of winning the victory. In no other branch of the drug business should the details receive more care and attention than in the prescription department. Every detail there is important. Realizing this fact, thoroughness is a feature of the prescription case and every prescription dispensed at this store has the personal attention of the proprietor and a careful checking system makes mistakes impossible. Nothing but the purest drugs and best pharmaceuticals are used namely those manufactured by the well known chemical house of Park Davis & Co. Bring your prescriptions here and obtain full satisfaction.

Without any fuss or show, in time, and we believe it is, they deserve the thanks of the community. —A new way has been found to dispose of counterfeit bills. A stranger entered a hotel at Reading and represented himself as being out of money. The landlord provided him with a meal and as he was setting he pulled out his bankerchief when twenty dollar bill dropped to the floor. —Hiram Thompson died suddenly at his home in Boyne City Monday morning. Mr. Thompson was among the earliest of the pioneers of the Charlevoix region. He was a brother of the late J. M. Thompson, of this place, and the eldest son of the Medad Thompson, who located here before Mormon times. Deceased was raised in what is now known as Charlevoix. For the past twenty years or more he has lived at Boyne City. He was a veteran of the civil war. At the time of his death he was Drain Commissioner of Charlevoix county.

—THE SENTINEL'S article on S. S. S. matters last week seems to have stirred up a furmoil in the Society, in which two of the most prominent skippers' figure. Capt. Pete Campbell takes exceptions to Capt. Sully Finnicum's strictures on him and proposes to get even. He says he can prove that Capt. Hily's election to the presidency was secured through intimidation and improper influence. Capt. Pete says: "Just because the Missouri is a larger boat than the Reeves, Capt. Finnican considers himself the best man but wait until navigation opens and I catch him alongside of my fish dock."

—The Kadir Boys entertainment at the high school room Monday evening brought together the largest crowd of the course. It will be remembered that this combination was billed in a high school course a year ago, but did not reach here owing to a railroad wreck. It looked for a time that we were again to be disappointed, for upon reaching Traverse City they found that owing to the snow blockade the afternoon train had been taken off. But the manager secured a special train and reached here just in time for the entertainment. The Kadir Boys entertainment is interesting because unique, but this is not all. It is at once unique and educational. The manager, Mr. Hatton, is an African explorer, and his assistant was born there. As one listens to their short "talks on" talks and looks into the faces of the young Africans, he learns more of the dark continent than he ever did from books. And their singing? How a quintet of savages can be taught to sing with such exquisite harmony, expression and enunciation, is a marvel. The entertainment converted us to the cause of African missions. The next and closing entertainment of the course will be Carney, March 22d.

—The Board of Commerce wish to impress upon the public mind the fact that there are enough of our people, outside the circle of business men who are taking shares and identifying themselves with the work. This is a work in which the business men alone are interested; every householder in Charlevoix should have an interest in it, and take at least, one share. If your name is not on the list, get it there, and help along a work that embraces in its scope the welfare of every citizen.

—Among the commercial travelers who make Charlevoix regularly, E. H. Salisbury may be rated as a pioneer. His face and form and cheery greeting are so familiar that he has come to be regarded as the "character here." He made Charlevoix in his travels in the early days, and hereby hoping that he may come yet many years. Most men of his profession are familiarly known only to their customers—but everybody knows Salisbury. He represents the Simmons Hardware Co., of St. Louis, the largest house of its kind in the world.

—C. Knickerbocker of Petoskey packed up and started for California. He dropped down at Hedlands, coming which he says: "All rest I thought I had struck Paradise and I didn't think I could ever be tempted to live in this frozen north again; but I soon learned that 'all is not gold that glitters,' and that it takes more than oranges and sunshine to pay board and support a family on." Mr. Knickerbocker is back to Petoskey and says: "I have learned my lesson by experience and I wish to warn others now that there is no use of going to California with empty pockets and expect to make a fortune. Others may go if they wish, though I advise them not, but I am content to hang paper and paint awhile longer in Petoskey."

—Miss Belle McNeill entertained the C. O. D. Club at her home on the north side last Thursday evening The Literary and Musical program, which was arranged for by Miss Edna Brooks, was a splendid success, every number being rendered in a most creditable manner. After the program Miss McNeill served dainty refreshments, and then the girls arranged for a card party, which will include their gentlemen friends, and for which rather unique invitations have been turned to be given to the Plum Lake region. It was a bachelor of the last J. M. Thompson, of this place, and the eldest son of the Medad Thompson, who located here before Mormon times. Deceased was raised in what is now known as Charlevoix. For the past twenty years or more he has lived at Boyne City. He was a veteran of the civil war. At the time of his death he was Drain Commissioner of Charlevoix county.

—On Friday evening of next week there will be given in the Congregational Church one of the most interesting childrens' entertainment ever given in Charlevoix, consisting of two parts. The first includes Haydn "Toy Symphony" and several other numbers. The second consists of an operetta entitled "The Fairies of the Seasons." Everybody should hear this entertainment. Admission 25 cents. Children under 12 half price.

—We clip the following from from the Petoskey News for the benefit of those who are constantly finding fault with Northern Michigan climate: "A recent letter to Guy M. Hankey from his father, C. F. Hankey, who with his wife and daughter left last week for Florida, states that they partly encountered a terrible ice storm from Chattanooga to Atlanta. On a stretch of sixty miles, Mr. Hackney states, that frost-bitten, telegraph poles 12 inches in thickness, and standing twelve feet broken to the ground by the severity of the storm and heavy weight of the ice. The fruit crops in that section were entirely destroyed also. On looking through the window he discovered, to his horror, that his wife had gone up from the inside to attempt a rescue of her loved ones. Mr. Pearson saw her overcome by the smoke and fire, and saw her fall to the floor.

He retraced his steps, and went inside and up the stairs, secured the inanimate form of his wife, and had but just reached the door steps when the upper floor went down. Both were in their night clothes, and in the biting cold of the winter morning. The father of Mrs. Pearson who was stopping with them, was also without a stitch of clothes except those he slept in.

After getting the wife and babe to the barn the husband and father ventured to the home of his mother and brother, about one-quarter of a mile away, and when the door was opened in response to his alarm he fell exhausted and is still in a precarious condition from his burns and smoke inhaled, as well as being partially frozen in the trip to his mother's home. Mrs. Pearson was immediately brought to the same place, but she, to, had received burns and was nearly frozen.

Mrs. Pearson's father, who was also in the house at the time, was able to escape by jumping through a window, but did not have time to save even his clothing; he stood the exposure better than the others.

Although Mr. and Mrs. Pearson were badly burned, they will recover. They were kindly cared for by the neighbors, and Mr. Pearson's brother, Register of Deeds W. J. Pearson, who was at Boyne Falls at the time, went immediately to their assistance. The report that the cable will be in operation by Oct. 1st.

A HOLOCAUST.

The Home of Supervisor Pearson Burned--Three Daughters Lose Lives.

One of the most terrible disasters in the history of Charlevoix county occurred early last Thursday morning in Springvale township.

The home of Supervisor Frank Pearson was totally destroyed by fire, and three daughters, aged 13, 11 and seven years, were burned to death in their beds.

The three daughters slept up stairs, while Mr. Pearson and wife and their youngest child, a baby, slept below. When the fire was discovered by Mr. Pearson he was so filled with the fumes of smoke that he had a hard time to rouse himself. However, he managed to get out and his first thought was for the children upstairs. The upper story was enveloped in flames but Mr. Pearson went to an upper window determined to rescue the children if possible. On looking through the window he discovered, to his horror, that his wife had gone up from the inside to attempt a rescue of her loved ones. Mr. Pearson saw her overcome by the smoke and fire, and saw her fall to the floor.

He retraced his steps, and went inside and up the stairs, secured the inanimate form of his wife, and had but just reached the door steps when the upper floor went down. Both were in their night clothes, and in the biting cold of the winter morning. The father of Mrs. Pearson who was stopping with them, was also without a stitch of clothes except those he slept in.

After getting the wife and babe to the barn the husband and father ventured to the home of his mother and brother, about one-quarter of a mile away, and when the door was opened in response to his alarm he fell exhausted and is still in a precarious condition from his burns and smoke inhaled, as well as being partially frozen in the trip to his mother's home. Mrs. Pearson was immediately brought to the same place, but she, to, had received burns and was nearly frozen.

The cable will start from the beach just south of the south pier, and will terminate near the south side of the entrance to Beaver Harbor. From the landing a land wire will be built across the fields to the church hat, and and 80 foot tower will be erected near the residence of Rev. Father Lagrange, who will be the Weather Bureau official. The telephone service will be also connected with McGann's store at the harbor.

The tolls for telephone service between Charlevoix and Beaver Harbor will not exceed twenty five cents.

The appropriation will not become available until July 1st, but it is expected that the cable will be in operation by Oct. 1st.

For a Fish Hatchery.

The board of commerce met superintendent Clark here Wednesday and talked over the question of a permanent fish hatchery here. It began with, Mr. Clark has been here in favor of establishing a permanent hatchery here, and has recommended it in his reports. The board will now go after it in earnest.

There is no doubt of success, as there are many weighty arguments in its favor and none against it.

For the propagation of lake trout and whitefish Mr. Clark says Charlevoix is the best point on the lakes, and Charlevoix will meet the commission half way by furnishing a site on the lake front.

Mr. Clark stated just before leaving, that the proposed new fish plant would hatch a greater number of eggs this spring than ever before.

BILL PASSED.

Beaver Island Cable Now an Absolutely Certainty.

A private letter to the writer from Washington Monday conveyed the unwelcome information that owing to the strained relations between the House and Senate, there was some doubt about the agricultural bill passing the Senate in the few days yet remaining of this congress. This bill contains the Beaver Island $50,000 cable item and while there was no doubt of ultimate success, it meant a delay of a year, at least.

We had only about rounded out a vigorous and somewhat intergant opinion of the U. S. Senate, when a telegram came that the bill passed the senate Saturday afternoon, without amendment.

This makes the Beaver Island cable a certainty, and we congratulate not only Beaver Island, but Charlevoix, upon the success of the project, which was started two years ago. It means much to the Island—more than can be now realized.

The cable will start from the beach just south of the south pier, and will terminate near the south side of the entrance to Beaver Harbor. From the landing a land wire will be built across the fields to the church hat, and and 80 foot tower will be erected near the residence of Rev. Father Lagrange, who will be the Weather Bureau official. The telephone service will be also connected with McGann's store at the harbor.

Yesterday the work crew with two carloads of lumber and two cars of carpenter tools and twenty-five men went down the line and began the operations which had such a summary plucking a short time ago. The depot will occupy the site opposite the box car headquarters and in consequence is on the bay side. It will be but 18x24.

Owing to a number of cases of typhoid fever at Traverse City, Health Officer Lawton sent samples of water from Grand Traverse Bay, the source of the city supply, to Ann Arbor. The analysis show no typhoid germs, but indicates some sewage contamination, which may cause trouble later. Strainers will be immediately put into the city mains in twenty four hours. Here is where Charlevoix has them all beat to a finish.

A meeting was held at Gills Pier Friday evening by the officers of the M. & N. E. to consider the proposition of extension of the branch from Provement. The meeting was attended by J. A. Bidwell, representing the M. & N. E. and all farmers interested in the right-of-way were present. Gills Pier is only four miles from Northport and six miles from Leland and about the same from Suttons Bay, and if the extension is assured no doubt the stress of the railway traffic in the Leelanau Peninsula will be relieved from the erratic service another winter.

A collision occurred at Bellaire Saturday evening at 6:30 o'clock on the Pere Marquette railroad, in which one engine was badly smashed, another was considerably damaged and a freight was completely demolished, even to the ground. The engines involved were freight engines No. 8 and No. 168. The former made its run to Frankfort as usual, and backed back to Bellaire, where it goes around its train to head properly. No. 168, it appears, was at Bellaire at that time and also, for some reason, started to go around its train from the opposite direction in which No. 8 was backing. Neither engineer saw the other engine until too late to prevent the collision and both locomotives were piled in the ditch, the engineers and firemen escaping injury miraculously.

Postmaster George Hall of Traverse City is sharing in the disbursement of the postoffice depredations, along with other lucky postmasters, though the payments are not large enough to clog the wheels of the distributing agency. Postmaster Hall's site for deficiency estimates like the others, and though it is only two cents, the postmaster general has sent a communication to congress informing that august body that he had no available funds for its payment. The other amounts due are twelve cents due to the postmaster of Petoskey, thirteen cents on an old account of Samuel J. Wall, the Cadillac postmaster, and twenty five cents due the postmaster of Marquette.

Wm. W. Mitchell, president of the Cobbs & Mitchell Lumber Co., announces that an iron furnace which will directly employ over 100 men and as many more indirectly will be located either near the Cadillac chemical Works or the Chamber, Higgins & Chemical Works in Cadillac, each of which institutions has an output of over 300,000 bushels of charcoal daily, which will be used in the furnace. The company will be capitalized at $200,000 and the plant will have a daily output of 100 tons charcoal pig iron. This industry is the direct outcome of the establishment of chemical plants whence comes the charcoal, and it marks a growth in Cadillac's manufacturing lines in an entirely new direction.

The Petoskey Democrat publishes the following from its files of twenty five years ago: We mentioned last week that logs had been got out for a new mill on the Charlevoix state road near Bismarkle, some six miles west of here, and now we are able to state that Mr. E. M. Cowley has contracted to build a circular saw mill and have it in running operation about the first of May next. Ike Stauffer, the wide awake real estate dealer in that neighborhood, says he is bound to have a postoffice out there in the town of Hayes, before long, and that he will be postmaster at the time made. He should get the lucrative position of postmaster at the corners, by will of course pick the best table in the back room, just for the accommodation of the boys from Petoskey, when they come out to see him.

Archibald D. Carpenter of Williamsburg, died Saturday at the age of 62 years, of liver complaint. He was a druggist at Williamsburg and has lived in that village about seven years. During the past year or two he has been in rather poor health and especially so the last few months. Mr. Carpenter was a veteran of the Civil war, having served in the 11th Michigan cavalry. Thirty years ago he moved to Boyne Falls, where he resided until moving to Williamsburg. His wife died nine years ago and the children are left: Dr. Archie, of Buffalo, N. Y.; Jessie M., who kept house for her father; Jessie K., at home; Lulu G., who is an attendant at the asylum in this city; Edwin, who resides at home. The funeral services were held Tuesday at Boyne Falls.

Contrary to the usual outcome when a farmer single handed attempts to fight a railway corporation, John Brown, of Kalkaska county, at present holds the winning hand against the P. M. Ry Co. What is known as the Mahan branch of the "Doodlebug" branch of the P. M. running through Kalkaska county splits John Brown's 160 acre farm in twain. The high handed methods employed by the company in crossing this land without permission or settlement aroused the owner, and when his offer to settle for $200 was refused he blocked the road by building a house on the track. The company asked Judge Chittenden for an injunction restraining Brown from interfering with traffic, but upon hearing the merits of the case the judge promptly dissolved it and severely scored the plaintiff for having made misrepresentations as to their title to the right of away, and at the same time enjoined them from further interference with Mr. Brown. This left the owner in sole possession of the railroad. In utter disregard of the court's order the company placed several cars of logs on the branch in question whereupon Mr. Brown tore up the track. Friday the case was brought before Judge Chittenden and a modification of the restraining order taken for by the railroad. The judge refused to make any change, and the present indications are that the company will now make a peaceable settlement with John Brown, after having spent several times the amount asked for right of way.

Fraud Exposed.

A few counterfeiters have lately been making and trying to sell imitations of Dr. Kings's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds, and other medicines, thereby defrauding the public. This is to warn you to beware of such people, who seek to profit, through stealing the reputation of remedies which have been successful, curing disease, for over 35 years. CHARLEVOIX

Its Harbor, and Its Commercial, Marine and Manufacturing Advantages.

CHARLEVOIX has one of the best harbors on the chain of lakes, with depth of channel from Lake Michigan of fifteen feet. Charlevoix harbor is open later in the winter and earlier in the spring than any other Lake Michigan harbor north of Frankfort, making the port an ideal one for winter railroad freight transfer to the north and west shores. Charlevoix is coming to be known as the chief marine center of the straits region. It is surrounded by as fine farming section as there is in Michigan, and the area of farming and grazing land is rapidly increasing. One of the largest and best Portland Cement plants in the State is in progress of construction, and it has a large and completed beet sugar factory that will do business before the year closes. It has unrivalled attractions for many kinds of industrial enterprises, and is the most beautifully located town in Michigan. Five churches, excellent schools, first-class electric light plant, and the best water that ever came out of the earth.

A Few Words About Prescriptions.
YOUR doctor fights disease with medicine. If the medicine is not right, he cannot conquer disease. If the druggist does his duty the medicine will be right, and your doctor will stand a fair chance of winning the victory. In no other branch of the drug business should the details receive more care and attention than in the prescription department. Every detail there is important. Realizing this fact, thoroughness is a feature of the prescription case and every prescription dispensed at this store has the personal attention of the proprietors and a careful checking system makes mistakes impossible. Nothing but the purest drugs and best pharmaceuticals are used insofar those manufactured by the well known chemical house of Park Davis & Co. Bring your prescriptions here and obtain full satisfaction.

We have not heard a word about it. Will chairman Lewis please enlighten us through the columns of his official organ, the Boyne Citizen and hail Jordan Enterprise?

—The Salvation Army is not content upon our streets, but we are told that they are doing good work at their hall, and in a quiet way about town in the reclamation of the wayward. As what we hear of them is true, and we believe it is, they deserve the thanks of the community. The Salvation Army has its own distinct way of doing things, but it is a way that saves souls and makes many a home happier. —A new way has been found to dispose of counterfeit bills. A stranger passed a bobet at Reading, and represented himself as being out of money. The landlord provided him with a meal and as he was arising he pulled out his bankperchief when twenty dollar bill dropped to the floor. —Hiram Thompson died suddenly at his home in Boyne City Monday morning. Mr. Thompson was among the earliest of the pioneers of the Pine Lake region. He was a brother of the late J. M. Thompson, of this place, and the eldest son of the Michael Thompson, who located there before Mormons times. Deceased was raised in what is now known as Charlevoix. He for twenty years or more he has lived at Boyne City. He was a veteran of the civil war. At the time of his death he was Drain Commissioner of Charlevoix county.

—The SENTINEL's article on S. S. S. matters last week seems to have stirred up a turmoil in the hockey, by which over of the most prominent skippers' figure. Capt. Pete Campbell takes exceptions to Capt. Billy Finnemore's strictures on him and proposes to get even. He says he can prove that Capt. Billy's election to the presidency was secured through intimidation and improper influence. Capt. Pete says: "Just because the Minnie is a larger boat than the Beaver, Capt. Finnemore considers himself the best man but wait until navigation opens and I catch him alongside of my fish car ship."

—The Kaffir Boys entertainment at the high school room Monday evening brought together the largest crowd of the course. It will be remembered that this combination was billed in A high school course a year ago, but did not reach here owing to a railroad wreck. It looked for a time that we were again to be disappointed, for upon reaching Traverse City they found that owing to the snow blockade the afternoon train had been taken off. But the manager secured a special train and reached here just in time for the entertainment. The Kaffir Boys entertainment is interesting because unique, but this is not all. It is as once unique and educational. The manager, Mr. Balmer, is an African explorer, and his assistant was born there. As one listens to their short "sweet-stuff" talks and looks into the faces of the young Africans, he learns more of the dark continent than he ever did from books. And their singing! How a quintet of savages can be taught to sing with such exquisite harmony, expression and enunciation, is a marvel. The entertainment converted us to the cause of African missions. The next and closing entertainment of the course will be Conway, March 22d.

—The Board of Commerce wish to impress upon the public mind the fact that there not enough of our people outside the circle of business men who are taking shares and identifying themselves with the work. This is a work in which the business men alone are interested: every householder in Charlevoix should have an interest in it, and take at least one share. If your name is not on the list, get it there, and help along a work that embraces in its scope the welfare of every citizen.

—Among the commercial travelers who make Charlevoix regularly, E. H. Salisbury may be rated as A pioneer. His face and form and cheery greeting are so familiar that he has come to be regarded as to the "manner born." He made Charlevoix in his travels in the early days, and here's hoping that he may come yet many years. Most men of his profession are familiarly known only to their customers—but everybody knows Salisbury. He represents the Simonds Hardware Co., of St. Louis, the largest house of its kind in the world.

—C. Knickerbocker of Petoskey packed up and started for California. He dropped down at Bellaire, conferring which he says: "At first I thought I had struck Paradise and I didn't think I could ever be tempted to live in this frozen north again; but I soon learned that 'all is not gold that glitters,' and that it takes more than oranges and sunshine to pay board and support a family on." Mr. Knickerbocker is back to Petoskey and says: "I have learned my lesson by experience and I wish to warn others now that there is no use of going to California with empty pockets and expect to make a fortune. Others may go if they wish, though I advise them not, but I am content to hang paper and paint awhile longer in Petoskey."

—Miss Helle McNeill entertained the C. O. D. Club at her home on the north side last Thursday evening. The Literary and Musical program which was arranged for by Miss Edna Brooks, was a splendid success, every number being rendered in a most creditable manner. After the program Miss McNeill served dainty refreshments, and then the girls arranged for a card party, which will include their gentlemen friends, and for which rather unique invitations have been issued, to be given in the parlors of Mrs. Jessie Rose Thursday evening of this week. The invitations were sent C. O. D. and the boys very gracefully permitted themselves to be held up for "postage due," but the young ladies will make them "forget it" by giving them a royal good time on the evening above mentioned.

—The Michigan Game and Fish Protective Association held a meeting at Lansing recently and decided to recommend the following changes in the game laws: Closing for five years the season on squirrel hunting, limiting the number of deer that may be killed in a season, to two; to increase the bounty on wolves and foxes and to offer a small bounty for owls and hawks. No person to be allowed to kill more than six partridges or ten quails in one day, nor to have in possession more than twenty partridges or quail at one time. Birds to sold storage 15 days after the close of the season liable to confiscation. Provide a closed season on rabbits, but all property owners to kill them on their own premises whenever they are injuring property. Also to fix a gun license of $1.00 per year, with the proviso that anyone owning 40 acres of land or more may obtain a license free from the County Clerk.

—This is the way a county paper gets back at the city papers. Doesn't it make you weary to read the rot of those rattle-brained idiots of the city press who are repeatedly ridiculing the country papers on their locals? These two by-from-nowhere counter fields think it awful funny when some country newspapers say Hiram Slocum has sold his Holstein cow to Eli Childrens' But of course, it is just the proper caper when they say Mrs. Franklin Oliver Lowdon has just returned from the Epsom Lorimer kennel. Oh, that's great! That bull pup would bring about 10 cents in the dog pound, while Slocum's cow would sell for $50 in the dark. Because Gussie Davis was over at Grant's Point Sunday to see his real girl they throw a shoe, but if William Henry Harrison Cook, the society leader, was in Hillsdale last Saturday to see Miss Cecur Talent they will slather over half a column and have three pictures of Gertie and William Henry on the front page.

—On Friday evening of next week there will be given in the Congregational Church one of the most interesting childrens' entertainment ever given in Charlevoix, consisting of two parts. The first includes Haydn "Toy Symphony" and several other numbers. The second consists of an operetta entitled "The Fairies of the Seasons." Everybody should hear this entertainment. Admission 25 cents. Children under 12 half price.

—We clip the following item from the Petoskey News for the benefit of those who are eternally finding fault with Northern Michigan climate: "A recent letter to Guy H. Hankey from his father, C. P. Hankey, who with his wife and daughter left last week for Florida, states that their party encountered a terrific ice storm from Chattanooga to Atlanta, Ga. For a stretch of sixty miles, Mr. Hankey states, that fruit trees, telegraph poles 12 inches in thickness, and standing timber were broken to the ground by the severity of the storm and heavy weight of the ice. The fruit crops in that section were entirely destroyed also, the temperature dropping to the lowest point that it had in that section for years."

BILL PASSED.

Beaver Island Cable Now an Absolute Certainty.

A private letter to the editor from Washington Monday conveyed the unwelcome information that owing to the strained relations between the House and Senate, there was some doubt about the agricultural bill passing the Senate in the few days yet remaining of this congress. This bill contains the Beaver Island $25,000 cable item and while there was no doubt of ultimate success, it meant a delay of a year, at least.

We had only about rounded out a vigorous and somewhat inelegant opinion of the U. S. Senate, when a telegram came that the bill passed the senate Saturday afternoon, without amendment.

This means the Beaver Island cable a certainty, and we congratulate not only Beaver Island, but Charlevoix, upon the success of the project, which was started two years ago. It means much to the Island—more than can be now realized.

The cable will start from the beach just south of the south pier, and will follow near the south side of the entrance to Beaver Harbor. From the landing a land wire will be built across the fields to the church list, and and 80 foot tower will be erected near the residence of Rev. Fr. O'Sullivan, who will be the Weather Bureau official. The telephone service will be also connected with McGean's store at the harbor.

The bills for telephone service between Charlevoix and Beaver Harbor will not exceed twenty five cents.

The appropriation will not become available until July 1st, but it is expected that the cable will be in operation by Oct. 1st.

For a Fish Hatchery.

The board of commerce superintendent Clark here Wednesday and talked over the question of a permanent fish hatchery here. To begin with, Mr. Clark has longbeen in favor of establishing a permanent hatchery here, and has recommended it in his reports. The board will now go after it in earnest.

There is no doubt of success, as there are many weighty arguments in its favor and none against it.

For the propagation of lake trout and whitefish Mr. Clark says Charlevoix is the best point on the lakes, and Charlevoix will secure a commission half way by furnishing a site on the lake front.

Mr. Clark stated just before leaving that the present auxiliary plant would hatch a greater number of eggs this spring than ever before.

A HOLOCAUST.

The Home of Supervisor Pearson Burned—Three Daughters Lose Lives.

One of the most terrible disasters in the history of Charlevoix county occurred early last Thursday morning in Springvale township.

The home of Supervisor Frank Pearson was totally destroyed by fire, and three daughters, aged 13, 11 and seven years, were burned to death in their beds.

The three daughters slept up stairs, while Mr. Pearson and wife and their youngest child, a baby, slept below. When the fire was discovered by Mr. Pearson he was so filled with the fumes of smoke that he had a hard time to arouse himself. However, he managed to get out and his first thought was for the children up-stairs. The upper story was enveloped in flames but Mr. Pearson went to an upper window determined to rescue the children if possible. On looking through the window he discovered, to his horror, that his wife had gone up from the inside to attempt a rescue of her loved ones. No. Pearson saw her overcome by the smoke and fire, and saw her fall to the floor.

He retraced his steps, and went inside and up the stairs, secured the inanimate form of his wife, and had but just reached the door steps when the upper floor went down. Both were in their night clothes, and in the biting cold of the winter morning. The father of Mrs. Pearson who was stopping with them, was also without a stitch of clothes except those he slept in.

After getting the wife and babe to the barn the hostler and father rushed to the home of his mother and brother, about one-quarter of a mile away, and when the door was opened in response to his alarm he fell exhausted and is still in a precarious condition from his burns and smoke inhaled, as well as being partially frozen in the trip to his mother's home. Mrs. Pearson was immediately brought to the same place, but she, to, had received burns and was nearly frozen.

Mrs. Pearson's father, who was also in the house at the time, was able to escape by jumping through a window, but did not have time to save even his clothing; he stood the exposure better than the others.

Although Mr. and Mrs. Pearson were badly burned, they will recover. They were kindly cared for by the neighbors, and Mr. Pearson's brother, Register of Deeds W. J. Pearson, who was at Boyne Falls at the time, went immediately to their assistance. The bodies of the three children were found in the ruins, burned to a crisp.

Mrs. Pearson is well known here, having been supervisor of his township for several years. It is needless to say that the sympathy of all for Mr. and Mrs. Pearson is widespread and deep.
